—In Michigan they have base ball matches on horseback.

—A baby in Chicago recently choked a little playmate to death.

—Half a bushel of potatoes is the price of admission to the Salt Lake Theatre.

—The Herald says that the taxes in New York are $2 66 for every hundred dollars worth of property.

—In fourteen races in which paper boats have been used this year, they have won eleven.

—A negro, after gazing at the Chinese, exclaimed: "If de white folks is dark as dat out dah, I wonder what's de color ob de niggers?"

—It is stated that Edwin Booth recently purchased some "cloth of gold" for his new costume in "Richelieu" at $125 a yard.

—Rumor again has it that Childs, of the Philadelphia Ledger, has offered a million in gold for the New York Herald, and that Bennett is almost willing.

—When a woman adopts the Grecian Bend to fascinate her admirers, the New York Sun says, it is reasonable to suppose that, like Goldsmith's heroine, she stoops to conquer.

—The foreign importations at New York during the last week were valued at a little under four millions and a quarter. Groceries, furs, fancy goods, jewelry and wines and liquors were the leading articles.

—The counsel for John H. Surratt announce that they will demand a trial on the indictment charging murder on the 21st instant, and will contend that the murder case should be finally disposed of before the trial for conspiracy is entered upon.

—A Mr. Eastman, in New York, proposes a plan of a railroad that shall accommodate all sorts of vehicles traversing streets. This would promote the cause of locomotion, the saving of carriages and of pavements, and conform to the general principal of equality in the use of public improvements.

—Mr. Greeley has concluded his "Recollections of a Busy Life," in the New York Ledger. The last paper is devoted to an account of his children, most of whom died in infancy, and of one of whom, who lived six years, Mr. Greeley says that he never was allowed to partake of animal food, or to know that an animal was ever killed to be eaten.

—Kellogg, one of the carpet-bag senators from Louisiana, sends his constituents bad news. In a recent letter from Washington, he writes that "the Radical ticket has a very slim chance of success," and that "the Northern people are more enthusiastic for Seymour and Blair than they have been in any previous canvass for the nominees of any party."

—The largest book trade auction sale ever known in this country is now going forward in New York. It began last Thursday and will continue through the week. The catalogue numbers four hundred and ninety pages. Books that have been shelved for years as unsaleable, and others in good demand, have equally been subjected to the hammer, and have brought from thirty to seventy per cent. on wholesale prices.

—Accounts from South America state that a strange phenomena occurred on the night preceding the earthquake, in the appearance of a brilliant light in the northeast, which was supposed to be a conflagration or a volcanic eruption. An enormous development of electric fluid filled the air. In Brazil, during the latter part of July, a meteor was observed, which disturbed magnetic instruments very greatly, the compass oscillating fifteen degrees from north to west.

—The Pacific Railroad hastens towards completion. No peaceful enterprise of ancient or modern times was ever prosecuted with such energy and persistence. The two mountain ranges of the continent have been successfully crossed, and within a year we shall have unbroken communication between New York and San Francisco. At the latest dates there remained only a gap of five hundred and twenty miles between the eastern and western portions. The line is being extended from both directions as fast as labor and means can grade and lay the track, the Central Pacific Company having put down six miles in a single day. By the close of this year it is thought the gap can be reduced to less than three hundred miles, possibly to less than two hundred.

—Mrs. Stanton approves of Horatio Seymour. She gives this tribute to his worth: "Simple and unostentatious, strictly temperate, he uses neither strong nor spirituous liquors, nor tobacco; of the most refined tastes and elevated morals, it is said of him, by those who have known him from his early youth, that he was never under the influence of strong drink—never known to tell an untruth or utter a profane oath—to indulge in a vulgar story, a coarse anecdote, or an obscene jest—nor did he ever violate the proprieties of the Sabbath, or sit at the gambler's table, or cross the threshold of more fashionable vice. Purity of life is with him a marked characteristic. Educated in the Episcopal Church, he has ever remained faithful to its communion, adoring its doctrines by a blameless life and multiplied deeds of charity."

—The new Tennessee militia law authorizes the Governor to call out any force he may deem necessary, governed by the following restrictions: Before the militia can be sent to any county, application for such must be made to the Governor by ten unconditional Union men, or three justices of the peace, belonging to said county, based on the allegations that the civil law cannot be enforced without military aid. Martial law can be proclaimed in any county on the representation of the judge and attorney-general, senators and representatives and ten good Union men in that county, that organized resistance to law exists, and that good citizens are not safe in their persons and property. The counties where such militia are quartered are to pay all the expenses incurred. The bill passed the Senate by a vote of eleven to eight, and the House by three-fourths majority. The Governor's proclamation will be issued in a day or two looking to the organization of the militia as he has expressed determination to have a considerable force organized, even if not required for immediate service.

—If we may believe a sad story, a fair relative of the Governor of New York State has had a remarkable career. Louisa J. Fenton was her name eight years ago, when she was a maiden beauty of seventeen. She found her fate in the person of a young man of good family, whom she loved altogether too well, but who finally married her under legal advice. She had been a wife hardly a year when the conduct of her husband in the way of infidelity enabled her to get a divorce. When free, she came to Boston—so the story goes—fascinated a gentleman of means in this city, and was married. Going to New York about a year after, she fell in with her former husband, the old love came back, and she soon gave her new husband ample cause for securing a divorce, which he did. As soon as the decree was entered, she was remarried to her first love. This time they held together until some six months ago, when the old trouble caused a new divorce, and now the handsome thrice-divorced woman is engaged to a rich and prominent New Yorker.

—It is announced that Capt. John Ericsson, of Monitor fame, has discovered a method of utilizing the sun's rays so as to employ them as a motive power. At the late centennial anniversary of the Swedish Academy of Land Capt. Ericsson made a communication that, as a result of his experiments, he was able to construct three "solar engines," of which the first was driven by steam formed by the concentration of the heat of the solar rays, and the other two by the expansion of atmospheric air, heated directly by concentrated radiant heat. He stated that such is the enormous development of solar heat that in an area of ten feet square on the surface will drive a fast steam engine of 45,984 horse-power, demanding a consumption of more than 100,000 pounds of coal every hour. Capt. Ericsson's experiments, it is alleged, show that the concentration of solar heat on ten feet square (or one hundred square feet of surface) develops a power exceeding one horse-power. The exact nature of the concentrating mechanism invented by Ericsson is not made public, but as thoroughly convinced of its practicability is Mr. Delamater, the proprietor of the well known Delamater Iron Works, that he declares, in a late scientific publication, that before the termination of the present season bread will be prepared from flour ground by the power of the solar engine!

CHARLESTON

For President, HORATIO SEYMOUR.
For Vice-President, FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

The Results of Reconstruction.

It has been one of the chief aims of the Radical press, ever since the close of the war, to create the impression that the white people of the South are a set of savage outlaws, in whose hands neither negro nor Northern man is safe. For this purpose they have systematically perverted facts and fabricated falsehood, without limit. To put down this alleged lawlessness, and to provide security for life and property, they pretended that the Reconstruction acts were necessary. The negro must have the ballot to protect himself and the Northerner sojourning among us. Very well! The negro has the ballot. What is the result? Have we peace, security, order? No, not even according to their own accounts. That hostility of the whites to the negro, which never existed before, except in the Radical imagination, has to a certain extent, been caused. That collision of the races, which was impossible while one race was the acknowledged superior of the other, becomes difficult to avoid when the inferior asserts an equality which the superior is unwilling to concede. But it is not only as between white and black that the Radical policy has tended to riot and bloodshed. A spirit of lawless violence has been excited among the negroes which brooks no opposition, come from what quarter it may. Who crosses the purpose of a negro mob, be he white or black, Northerner or Southerner, is in danger of his life. Even those very personifications of Radicalism, the United States colored troops, have been shot down by the "loyal" element of our population. Colored orators are assaulted if they breathe aught but Radicalism. The case of Pleasant Goode, at Aiken, is fresh in the minds of all, and there are a number of colored men in Charleston, now working for the Democratic party, who are prevented from coming out openly and canvassing the district by their dread of the violence of the Radical negroes. Free speech, of which the Radicals prate so much, is lost even for the negro—to such a state has the South been reduced by the teachings of Radicalism. That our doom is sealed,—that we must continue to go from bad to worse until we end like Hayti in anarchy and desolation, if the Radical policy of the equality of races is persisted in, is evident to every reflecting mind. To avert so great a catastrophe we must return to the government of the constitution—the white man's government. We must elect SEYMOUR and BLAIR.

Reform in England.

England has manifestly entered upon a new epoch. New men occupy the attention of Parliament. New ideas are at work in that once conservative and orderly body. Mr. BRIGHT's broad face is rivalled by Mr. MILL's broad head, and the wrinkles of fun on Tom HUGHES' cheek are as honorable as Mr. GLADSTONE's wrinkles of study. The new regime of representatives corresponds to the new class of electors whom Mr. DISRAELI has admitted to the ballot-box.

It is stated by the Economist, one of the leading political journals of England, that a new political principle has been adopted by the statesmen of that country, of which even PALMERSTON never dreamed. It is the principle of Reform. Public men who have hitherto inculcated rest and thankfulness as the duty which the people owed to their "admirable constitution," now insist that the times need mending, and that the burden of proof lies on those who are opposed to reforms, not upon those who propose them. It is easy to conclude what the acceptance of this principle involves. It is itself the pronunciamento of a great revolution. The pendulum that swung to one extreme in the age of the STUARTS has swung to the other. Henceforth the tried institution has less authority than the untried theory, and the divine right to rule, abdicating the throne and denied to the effete convocation, takes up its abode in the attic of the philosopher and the cottage of the peasant. At last, after centuries of reproach, the fame of JACK CADE is vindicated. Well may the Englishman tremble as he confronts a future whose character is to be shaped by the principle of Reform, unfettered.

We need not say that for our part we are not unfriendly to reform. Nor would we be surprised at many of the changes advocated by fearless thinkers like Mr. MILL should turn out to be great public benefits. Undoubtedly the disendowment of the Irish Church, for example, will abate an antiquated nuisance and repair a national wrong. What we object to, is the principle according to which the civil policy of England is hereafter to be regenerated—the principle of radicalism as opposed to that of development. We do not admire the wisdom which can devise no better means for repairing a leak than the tearing down of the house—which finds in the abuse of an institution a sufficient argument against its continued existence. Let the English reformers carry out their ideas, and what can save the trial by jury or the parental or conjugal relation? In regard to each of them, how easy to make a book of one thousand and one outrages, as monstrous in every circumstantial horror as the notorious volume with which the abolitionists used to attack slavery.

One of the most significant indications of change in England is the agitation of the question of female suffrage, and the favor with which it is regarded by certain leading politicians, among whom Mr. MILL has the foremost place. At the next election in England women will everywhere present themselves at the polls. The fair electors have already in hand minute directions in regard to the form of cloth and the manner of urging it. In various instances the privilege has been already conceded. In some places, women have already succeeded in getting their names upon the register, making use of the inattention of those who had charge of the electoral lists, or taking advantage of some peculiarity of local usage or some carelessly constructed law. "The National Society for Women's Suffrage" asserts the right of all female rate-payers to vote under the act of 1867. English conservatism may succeed in securing an adverse decision upon the general question, but if the principle avowed by the Economist is adopted in England, there can be no doubt as to the final success of the movement, which will make the English family a debating society, and the English hearth a rostrum.

What lends a special interest to this subject amongst us, is the fact stated by the Economist, that this general change of English sentiment is directly due to the overthrow of the Confederacy and the triumphant issue of the North from its troubles. A question quite beyond the range of American slavery or secession is believed by English thinkers to have been decided here—a question in which every monarch, every subject and every institution of the Old World are interested. Sometimes it is termed reform, sometimes progress, sometimes liberty; sometimes the right of majorities. But by all these deceptive names the same thing is intended, viz.: That institutions, of whatever sorts, are objectionable, because they are institutions, and that they who have the physical power have the right to overthrow them. Young England has entered the school, whence the South has just graduated, perhaps he will find, as we have found, that the game is not worth the candle.

Mayor's Proclamation.

PROCLAMATION!

By GEORGE W. CLARK, Mayor of Charleston.

CITY HALL, MAYOR'S OFFICE, CHARLESTON, S. C., August 18, 1868.

Believing it the sincere desire of every individual in this community to assist in preserving the public peace, and maintaining the dignity of the laws; feeling, in the political excitement now pervading all classes of our people, that through a single act of violence, either by accident or otherwise, we may be overwhelmed in a deplorable breach of law and order—

I, GEORGE W. CLARK, Mayor of the city aforesaid, do call upon all good citizens to abstain as far as possible from all public demonstrations of a noisy or riotous nature. Let each one regard himself as answerable to the public for the good conduct of all. Let no one, in the exercise of liberty, do that against the law which will by law deprive him of his liberty. The public peace must and shall be preserved.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the city (L. S.) the date and year above mentioned.

GEORGE W. CLARK, Mayor.
