Some interesting experiments have just been made at L'Orient, on board the French frigate Coligny, the object of which is to utilize the electric light at sea. By means of a submarine reflector, the water was illuminated to a great depth, so that it was possible to look down from the deck and see the fish, attracted by the light, swimming round the lamp as if in an aquarium. A kind of diving-bell, with a large glass eye on one side, and arranged to supply air to a diver, was also let down to a depth of thirty-eight fathoms. By means of this apparatus, it will be easy to inspect submarine constructions, to fish coral, &c., and recover wrecked property. Signals were likewise exchanged, by means of the electric light, between the Coligny and the Semaphore off Belle Isle. These different applications of the electric light were made, in the presence of a military commission, by the inventor, M. Bazin, civil engineer, of Angers, and were found to give satisfactory results.

MIXED METAPHOR.—A most amusing instance of this very common violation of the rules of taste occurred recently in the Court of Conciliation, (or Court of Aggravation, as an indignant lady friend who had lost her suit there called it.) One of the learned counsel, in his address to the Court, perpetrated the following: "The gentleman is all wrong, your honors—there is great cry and little wool—but he has the wrong pig by the ear!" The gravity of the bench was destroyed.

This is almost equal to Sir Boyle Roche's famous one in the House of Commons—"Mr. Speaker, I smell a rat; I see him flying through the air; I will yet nip him in the bud."

Sir Boyle once said, urging an agricultural measure, that "it would make the barren hills fruitful valleys."

The great fair of Leipsic this year attains its hundredth anniversary, having been established in 1765. Before that year, the fair was visited by numerous booksellers from all parts of Germany, but Frankfort was then the great emporium of the book trade, especially for foreigners. At present, the German booksellers send their books to their different correspondents as they appear, and meet at Leipsic fair to balance the accounts of sales during the year.

DEATH AND SUFFERING AT SEA.—The Liverpool Mercury, of the 17th ult., contains an account of the sinking in March last of the ship Sam Dunning, from Rangoon for Liverpool. Out of a crew of thirty-one men, only six survived. These survivors kept afloat on a raft for several days, enduring terrible sufferings. They had to eat leather belts and pitch out of the seams, and to drink sea water.
