In the spring the birds are singing
As they build their summer home.
Blades of grass and buds are springing,
O'er the mead the cattle roam.
In the spring your blood is freighted
With the germs that cause disease.
Humors, boils, are designated
Signals warning you of these.
In the spring that tired feeling
Makes you every duty shirk.
Makes you feel like begging, stealing,
Rather than engage in work.
But there's something known that will a
Man to health and vigor lead.
You will find Hood's Sarsaparilla
Just exactly what you need.

The bible does not promise it, but there is no doubt but that the Lord will forgive all the lies a man tells when he is in love.

Does it Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflamation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. THE POLITICAL BALL HAS STARTED.

Prohibition Not Accepted by the Platform Club A Good Attendance.

The meeting of the Manning Farmers Platform Club last Saturday was well attended, perhaps it had the largest attendance of any club in the county, and perhaps the discussions at this meeting were about as interesting as any in the county. After the usual announcement by the president of the object of the meeting, the club went right into the election of officers. Capt. D. J. Bradham who had been president from the formation of the club, expressed a desire to retire from the position, and so did also Mr. S. J. Bowman wish to retire from the position of Secretary. However nominations were made, and the names of both Captain Bradham and S. J. Bowman were proposed for president. Mr. Bowman declined, and said, rather than accept the presidency he would continue to serve as Secretary; then Captain Bradham was elected without opposition. Secretary Bowman was similarly re-elected.

In expressing his thanks to the club for the renewed manifestation of confidence, Captain Bradham suggested "there was an issue," and when he finished his remarks Mr. Louis Appelt agreed that there was an issue, and said that the president had not stated it, and the club was entitled to know, and then in a few remarks he said the issue, in the coming campaign was, "Prohibition against the Dispensary." He alluded to the call for the Prohibition conference, and the letter issued by A. C. Jones the chairman of the Prohibition Executive Committee, and quoted Mr. Jones as ordering the Prohibitionists "to draw the lines." Mr. Appelt contended that this letter together with the president's remarks brought the issue on, and those who do not believe in the practicability of a prohibitory law should come forward, and give expression to that idea by their votes for delegates.

M. C. Galluchat Esq., made a brief speech in which he thought the issue was not "liquor," but one that was more far reaching—it was one of Democracy; that this club was to elect delegates to a county convention, which would elect delegates to a State convention, and that convention would send representatives to the National convention, and care should be taken not to send men who are not true and loyal democrats. He then referred to Senator McLaurin's vote on the Paris treaty, and warn his hearers not to elect delegates who endorsed McLaurin's views.

Captain Bradham followed in a very earnest speech, in which he agreed with Mr. Galluchat that there was an issue of national importance, and also one of State importance. He admitted the dispensary was better than the old bar-room system, but that the time had come when we could have the dispensary so restricted that liquor could only be legally sold for medicinal, mechanical, scientifical and sacramental purposes. He criticised Senator Appelt's position on the liquor question and intimated that when a candidate, he told the people if they wanted prohibition he would so vote, and if they wanted dispensary he would so vote. The captain endeavored to show an inconsistency, for while on this theme he said that the Senator introduced a bill which meant the disruption of the system. He then jumped on Senator McLaurin and denounced him for voting for imperialism and for being an expansionist, and the editor of THE TIMES for endorsing McLaurin and comparing him with Senator Morgan of Alabama. Morgan, he said, had always been true, but McLaurin had betrayed his people. The captain stated that Mr. Appelt had said that he Bradham) should not go to the convention, and he made an eloquent appeal to be sent, and challenged Mr. Appelt to meet him on the floor of the convention. He asked the members not to humiliate him, and that he would ask that Mr. Appelt be elected also. He wanted to meet him and discuss the issue, that he had nothing to conceal and he would beard the lion in his den (referring to Appelt as the lion, but the results show that this Daniel was not so fortunate as Daniel of old.) Captain Bradham was at his best and from his standpoint he made a good speech, as he usually does when interested in a subject, and when he concluded Mr. Appelt rose in reply. He started out by expressing surprise at Mr. Galluchat's speech; he had no idea he would have him to consider in this discussion. He then proceeded to reply to Captain Bradham. With reference to the vote of Senator McLaurin he said that McLaurin had voted in accordance with the advice of William Jennings Bryan, the head and front of the Democratic party, and having followed such advice no one could truthfully charge him with being a Republican and with being an imperialist. He said that the question of expansion was of such an international character that with all of his reading he confessed his inability to understand it thoroughly; that Democrats all over the country differed and will continue to do so until the convention at Kansas City makes a declaration. There was no white man in this county opposed to Bryan and all of us hoped that he would lead the party triumphant. The national problem was not before us, because we are all of one sentiment, but we are divided on this liquor question and we should not sail under false colors for political advantage. He said that Chairman Jones of the Prohibition party had sent forth his dictum corrolling the Prohibitionists and ordering them to "draw the lines." To draw the lines meant, "do not vote for any man who is not branded Prohibition," and to say now it is unfair or out of place to spring this issue in the club is nonsense. The only fair and square manner to spring this issue, is to start it in the clubs, elect delegates accordingly to county convention, and continue the fight in the county convention on up to the State convention, and then in the primary. He did not say that Captain Bradham should not go to the convention, for he would not presume to say what free white men shall do with their votes, but he did say he ought not go representing the views he expresses because, he would be misrepresenting his constituents. He had no personal feeling in the matter and felt somewhat embarrassed at being on opposite sides with Captain Bradham after so long and so intimate an association with him in politics, but differing as they do, and both honest in their convictions, there would be a mutual loss of respect if one yielded to the other for policy sake. Mr. Appelt defended himself from the intimation of inconsistency and said that his bill on the liquor question introduced in the Senate was entirely consistent with his entire political career. He has always believed in submitting to the people important questions, and being in a representative capacity, he wanted the liquor question submitted, so that the people could say what system they wanted and leave with them for their control such system as they themselves select. He said, in looking over the assemblage there was no necessity of defending his democracy, and would let his political record together with his writings speak for themselves. All of these other questions were foreign and beclouding to the issue. We have now confronting us the liquor issue; believing that prohibition is an impossibility and a theory which will bring about a worse condition, he was conscientiously opposed to it; he admitted liquor to be an evil, but one that can only be managed by wisdom rather than sentiment. The people were now becoming reconciled to the operation of the law, and it is improving. He admitted that scandals had crept into the dispensary, and so had scandals gotten into the churches, the banks, State, county and town offices, but on that account these institutions were not destroyed, but improved; the rotten planks were taken out and new planks put in. He said let us not destroy this institution to gratify the whims of a few good, but mistaken men who think it is their sacred duty to vote for prohibition, and that they are not responsible for results. It is the duty of all men to vote for a measure that will be most practical and bring about the best results and should they vote us into a worse condition they cannot shirk the responsibility.

It was a battle to the finish and when Mr. Appelt finished speaking nominations were ordered. It did not take a practical eye to discover that neither side was going to be captured by "surprises" and after some of the names had been offered in nomination, Mr. Appelt drew from his pocket and nominated a ticket containing the following names: S. H. Bradham, J. M. Windham, J. F. Bradham, J. C. Barrett, W. J. Rawlinson, R. H. Davis, W. T. Francis, J. W. Ridgill, W. P. Gardner, E. B. Brown and Louis Appelt.

The other side nominated the following: E. L. Wilkins, D. J. Bradham, D. M. Bradham, S. J. Bowman, W. C. Davis, J. E. Kelly, W. M. Lewis, W. W. Johnson, J. C. Johnson, J. L. Wilson, E. B. Gamble, F. C. Thomas and M. C. Galluchat.

The vote was by written ballot and the managers were some time in counting. When at last they finished, the ticket nominated by Mr. Appelt was elected by a fine majority, notwithstanding the fact that good work was done for the other side.

When the result was announced nominations were made for executive committeeman. Mr. Louis Appelt, Captain D. J. Bradham and Mr. J. F. Bradham were named. The two later declined and Mr. Appelt was unanimously elected. The meeting was devoid of ill feeling, but spirited from start to finish, virtually being a contest between Captain Bradham and Mr. Appelt; the former representing prohibition views and the latter advocating the dispensary system.
