Why Many Moving Picture Films Are Crude.

The Woman's Home Companion is conducting a campaign for better moving pictures. Each month its editors in New York are examining hundreds of films and each month they recommend to their readers the best. In this month's Companion about one hundred films are recommended and an article accompanies the list entitled, "How Better Films Are Selected." In the course of which the writer comments in part as follows on the imperfection of certain films and the reasons therefor:

"Violations of common sense are too frequent. The hero's hair turned white following a thrilling adventure, which transformation was too much for the credulity of a twelve-year-old, who required the assistance of an indignant usher to quiet his discovery.

"A slender office clerk, unarmed, beat up a trio of big, burly, armed thugs and saved the cash drawer. The murderer at bay, in another picture, picked off a dozen policemen, straight shooting, without reloading his revolver, before he escaped with a bag of gold. It is too much to expect picture audiences to find such pictures entertaining. Life is too full of real dramatic sensation.

The director has his troubles, however. The story, no matter how long or how short, must be made exactly into five hundred or a thousand feet of film. The result is a congestion of plot, omitting necessary detail, so that grotesque impressions arouse the spectators' ridicule or criticism, or the padding with unessential details to make the required length encourage a yawn.

"The producer says this condition is necessary because the public demands a daily change of pictures, which in turn demands a mechanical distribution, and this necessitates a mechanical production."

More Fish Now.

The fishermen report that they are having better luck with hook and line than for years. The removal of fish traps from the streams is responsible for the condition and it is hoped that the fish warden will keep the streams open.—Sumter Item.

Fire Alarm Prank.

A guy wire coming in contact with a wire of the Gamewell fire alarm system, at the intersection of North Church and Walnut streets, Monday night caused the fire alarm to sound at frequent intervals between 11 p. m. and 1 a. m. At each alarm the magneto controlling the chains at the horse stalls dropped and for about twenty-five times the horses rushed out to their positions under the harness. The people of the city were alarmed over the peculiar antics of the fire alarm, some thinking that the whole town was on fire. The number of gongs indicated that the electric current in the district was to be cut off and this added to the suspense of those who were not on to the situation.—Spartanburg Journal.

Rain as "Chaser."

The accumulation of several months collection of whiskey was poured out Monday morning by the sheriff's office, when 1,100-odd bottles of beer and 11 gallons of whiskey was poured out upon the ground to mingle its strength with the rain which was falling during most of the day.—Greenville News.
