THE INTELLIGENCER, ANDERSON, S. C., THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1915.

PAGE SEVEN

kerchief from his satchel. A sudden exclamation broke from his lips. He stood for a moment as though turned to stone. Before him, on the top of please."

the little pile of white cambric, was a small black box! With a movement of the fingers which was almost mechanical, he removed the lid and drew out the customary little scrap of pa-He smoothed it out before him on the dressing case and read the message:

"You will fail here as you have failed before. Better go back. There is more danger for you in this country than you dream of,"

His teeth came flercely together and his hands were clenched. His thoughts had gone like a flash to Lenora. Was it possible that harm was intended for her? He put the idea away from him almost as soon as conceived. The thing was unimaginable. Craig was here, must be here. in the close vicinity of the house.

The atmosphere of the pleasant breakfast room to which in due course he descended, was cheerful enough Lady Ashleigh had already taken her place at the head of the table. She touched an electric bell under her foot and a moment or two later the butler appeared. "Go up and see how long your master will be?" Lady Ashleigh directed. "Very good, your ladyship."

The man was backing through the doorway in his usual dignified manner when he was suddenly pushed on one side. The valet who had waited upon Quest, and who was Lord Ashleigh's own servant, rushed into the room. He almost shouted to Lady Ashleigh; "Your ladyship-the master! Something has happened! He won't move!

Quest auddenly whispered to the professor. Then he turned to the keeper. "Bring him upstairs, Middleton, for a moment," he directed. "Follow us,

They passed into the bedchamber. Quest signed to the keeper to bring Craig to the side of the four-poster. Then he drew down the sheet.

"Is that your work?" he asked, sternly. Craig, up till then, had spoken no word. He had shambled to the bedside, a broken, yet, in a sense, a stolid figure. The sight of the dead man, however, seemed to galvanize him into sudden and awful vitality. He threw up his arms. His eyes were horrible as they glared at those small black marks. His lips moved backwards and forwards, helplessly at first. Then at last he spoke. "Strangled!" he cried. . "One more!" "That is your work," the criminologist said, firmly.

Craig collapsed. He would have fallen bodily to the ground if Middleton's grip had not kept him up. Quest bent over him. It was clear that he had fainted. They led him from the

"We'd better lock him up until the police arrive," Quest suggested. "I suppose there is a safe place somewhere?"

The professor awoke from his stupor. "Let me show you," he begged. "I know the way. We've a subterranean hiding place which no criminal on this earth could escape from." They led him down to the back part of the house into a dry cellar which had the appearance of a prison cell. "This place has been used before now, in the old days, for malefactors," the professor remarked. "He'll be safe there. Craig," he added, his voice trembling, "Craig-I-I can't speak to you. How could you!" There was no answer. Craig's face was buried in his hands. They left him there and turned, the key.

The maidservant stood on one side to let him pass. Almost at the same moment the door of the front foom opened and a pleasant-looking elder ly lady appeared. "I am Mrs. Willet," she announced.

"I am Mr. Quest," the criminologist told her quickly. "You may have heard your niece, Lenora, speak of "Then perhaps you can tell me what has become of herr' Mrs. Willet ob-"Isn't she here?"

Mrs. Willet shook her head. "I had a telegram from her from Plymouth to say that she was coming, but I've seen nothing of her as yet." 'You've changed your address, you know," Quest reminded her, after a moment's reflection. "I wrote and told her," Mrs. Willet began. "After all, though," she went on thoughtfully, "I am not sure whether she could have had the letter. But if she went up to Hampstead, anyone would tell her where I had moved to.

There's no secret about me.". "Lenora did go up to 157 Elsmere road yesterday," Quest told her. "They gave her your address here, as they have just given it to me."

"Then what's become of the child?" Mrs. Willet dem.inded. Quest, whose brain was working quickly, scribbled upon one of his cards the address of the hotel where he had taken rooms and passed it "Why Lenora didn't come on to you here I can't imagine," he said. "How-ever, I'll go back to the hotel where she was to spend the night after she arrived. She may have gone back there. That's my address, Mrs. Willet. If you hear anything I wish you'd let me know. Lenora's quite a particular friend of mine and I am a little any Quest had already opened the front door for himself and passed out. He sprang into the taxi, which he had kept waiting. "Clifford's hotel in Payne street."

he told the man. He lit a cigar and smoked furiously all the way, throwing it on to the pavement as he hurried into the quiet private hotel which a fellow passenger on the steamer had recommended as being suitable for Lenora's one night alone in town. "Can you tell me if Miss Lenora Macdougal is staying here?" he asked at the office.

The woman shook her head. "Miss Macdougal stayed here the night before last," she said, "and her luggage is waiting for orders. She left here yesterday afternoon to go to her aunt's, and promised to send for her things later on during the day. There they stand, all ready for her." "What time did she go?"

"Directly after an early lunch. It must have been about two o'clock." Quest hurried away. So after all there was some foundation for this queer sense of depression which had been hovering about him for the last fr.w days! "Scotland Yard," he told the taxi driver.

He thrust another cigar between his teeth, but forgot to light it. He was

"I'll Give a Ten-Pound Note to Anyone Who Gets Me Out to the Barton Before She Sails."

A new interest seemed suddenly to have crept into Hardaway's manner. "Let me see," he said. "if she left Clifford's hotel about two, she would have been at Hampstead about half past two. She would waste a few minutes in making inquiries, then she probably left Hampstead for West Kensington, say, at a quarter to three. Give me at once a description of the young lady." he demanded.

Quest drew a photograph from hi: pocket and passed it silently over. "Mr. Quest," he said, "it is just possible that your visit here has been a .

exceedingly opportune one." "Come along with me," he con-tinued. "We'll talk as we go." They entered a taxi and drove off westwards. "Mr. Quest," he went on, "for two months we have been on the track of a man and a woman whom we strongly suspect of having decoyed half a dozen perfectly respectable young women, and shipped them out to South America."

"The white slave traffic!" Quest gasped.

"Something of the sort." Hardaway admitted. "Well, we've been closing the net around this interesting couple, and last night I had information brought to me upon which we are acting this afternoon. We've had them watched and it seems that they were sitting in a tea place about three o'clock yesterday afternoon when a young woman entered who was obviously a stranger to London. You see, the time fits in exactly, if your assistant decided to stop on her way to Kensington and get some tea. She asked the woman at the desk the best means of getting to West Kensington without taking a taxicab. Her - description tallies exactly with the photograph you have shown me. The woman whom my men were watching addressed her and offered to show her the way. They left the place together. My men followed them. The house has been watched ever since and we are raiding it this afternoon. You and I will just be in time."

He stopped the cab and they go out. A man who seemed to be strolling aimlessly along reading a newspaper suddenly joined them.

"Well, Dixon?" his chief exclaimed. The man glanced around. "I've got three men roun

"All right," he assented. "We shall consulted a slip of paper. He had scarcely rung the bell before a slightly parted curtain in the front room fell together and a moment later the door was opened by a man in the livery of a butler, but with the face and phy-sique of a prize-fighter.

"Lady of the house," Quest demand-

Almost immediately he was con-

"You had better come in," she in-Quest, however, who had heard the footsteps of the others behind him, loi-

Quest, as though stumbling against tered there for a moment.

you in the drawing room.

vited. "Please do not stand in the scious of a woman standing in the hall

ed. "Want to see the lady of the back, Mr. Hardaway," he said.

ment.

house."

before him.

loorway.

got in all right."

The woman shricked. The butler suddenly sprang upon the last man to enter and sent him spinning down the steps. Almost at that instant there was a scream from upstairs. Quest took a running jump and went up the stairs four at a time. The butler, who had so far defied arrest, suddenly snatched the revolver from Hard-away's hand and fired blindly in front of him, missing Quest only by an inch or two. "Don't be a fool, Karl!" the woman called out. "The game's up. Take it quietly."

O: co more the chrick rang through the house. Quest rushed to the door of the room from whence it came, tried the handle, and found it locked. He ran back a little way and charged it. From inside he could hear a turmoil of voices. White with rage and passion, he pushed and kicked madly. There was a shot from inside, a bullet came through the door within an inch of his head, then the crash of broken crockery and a man's groan. With a final effort Quest dashed the door in and staggered into the room. Lenora was standing in the far corner, the front of her dress torn and blood up n her lips. She held a revolver in her hand, and was covering a man whose head and hands were bleeding. Around him were the debris of a broken jug. "Mr. Quest!" she screamed. "Don't go near him-I've got him covered. I'm all right." Quest drew a long breath. The man who stoci glaring at him was well dressed and still young. He was unarmed, however, and Quest secured him in a moment.

"The girl's mad!" he said sullenly. "No one wanted to do her any harm." Hardaway and his men came troop ing up the stairs. Quest relinquished his prisoner and went over to Lenora

"I've been so frightened." she sobbed. "They got me in here-they told me that this was the street in which my aunt lived-and they wouldn't let me go. The woman was horrible. And this afternoon this man came. The brute!"

Quest turned to Hardaway.

"I'll take the young lady away," he "You know where to find us." said. Lenora had almost recovered when they reached the hotel. Walking up and down they found the professor. "My friend!" he exclaimed-"Mr.

Quest! It is the devil incarnate we came into Southampton early this morning, and here I am. Say, before we go any further, tell me about Craig."

"We've had him." Quest confessed, "and, lost him again. He escaped last night."

"Where from?" Laura asked. "Hamblin house."

"Say, is that anywhere near the south coast?" the girl demanded excitedly

"It's not far away," Quest replied, quickly, "Why?" "I'll tell you why," Laura explained.

"I was as sure of it as anyone could be. Craig passed me in Southampton water this morning, being rowed out to a steamer. Not only that, but he recognized me. I saw him draw back and hide his face, but somehow I couldn't believe that it was really he. was just coming down the gangway and I nearly fell into the sea, I was so surprised."

Quest was already turning over the pages of the timetable.

'What was the steamer?" he demanded.

"I found out," Laura told him. "I tell you. I was so sure of it's being Craig that I made no end of inquirles. It was the Barton, bound for India, first stop Port Said." "When does she sail?" Quest asked.

"Tonight-somewhere about seven," Laura replied. Quest glanced at the clock and threw down the timetable. He turned toward the door. They all followed

"I'm for Southampton," he an-nounced. "I'm going to try to get on board that steamer before she sails. Lenora, you'd better go upstairs and lie down. They'll give you a room here. Don't you stir out till I come back. Professor, what about you?" "I shall accompany you," the professor declared. "And nothing," Lenora declared, firmly, as she caught at Quest's arm. would keep me away."

case they care to send a man down," Quest decided.

ton, where they were joined by a man from Scotland Yard. The little party drove as quickly as possible to the docks.

"Where does the Barton start from?" Quest asked the plermaster. The may pointed out a little way down the water.

"She's not in dock, sir," he said. "She's lying out yonder. You'll bare-ly catch her, I'm afraid," he added, glancing at the clock. They hurried to the edge of the quay. "Look here," Quest cried, raising his voice, "I'll give a ten-pound note to anyone who gets me out to the Barton before she sails."

The little party were almost thrown into a tug, and in a few minutes they were skimming across the smooth water. Just as they reached the steamer, however, she began to move. "Run up alongside," Quest ordered. The captain came down from the bridge, where he had been conferring with the pilot.

"Keep away from the side there," he shouted. "Who are you?" "We are in search of a desperate criminal whom we believe to be on

Sure To See

Be

The

Today

At

The

Black

"I'll telephone to Scotland Yard, in

They caught a train to Southamp-

They all trooped out of the room They all trooped out of the room and up the stairs, the professor lead-ing the way. They pushed open the door of Lord Ashleigh's bedchamber. In the far corner of the large room was the four-poster, and undernaht the clothes a silent figure. The pro-fessor turned down the sheets. Then he held out his hand. . His face, too, was blanched. "Juliz, don's come," he bagged. "I must know," she almost shricked. I must know!"

"George is dead," the professor said slowly.

There was a moment's awful silence broken by a piercing scream from Lady Ashleigh. She sank down upon the sofa, and the professor leaned over her. Quart turned to the little group of frightenud servants who were gath-sred round the doorway. "Telephone for a doctor," he or dered; "also to the local polles sta-

"He, too, approached the bed and reverantly lifted the covering. Lord Ashleigh was lying there, his body a little doubled up, his arms wide out-siretched. On his throat were two sek marks

They had led Lady Ashleigh from the room. The professor and Quest atood face to from. The formar's ex-pression, however, had lost all his aniable screnity. His face was white and schede

"Quest! Quest!" he almost sobbed. "My brother!-George, whom I loved like nobody else on earth! Is he real-ly dead?"

"Absolutely1"

2 ....

The professor gripped the oak pillar of the bedstead. He seemed on the "The mark of the Hands is upon his throat," Quest pointed out. t," Quest po "The Hands! Oh, my God!" the lessor grouned.

CHAPTER XXL

Quest stood, frowning, upon the pavament, gains at the obviously empty is use. He look'd once more at the slip of paper which Lenors had given him. There was no possibility of uny mistake:

Mrs. Willer, 157 Eleviere Road, Hempstead. This was 157 and the house was empty. After a moment's hesitation he rang the bell at the adjoining door. woman, who had been watching him from the front room, suswered the ons at once.

"Can you tell me," he inquired, "what has become of the lady who used to live at 157-Mrs. Willet?" "She's moved," was the uncompromistng reply. "Do you know where to?" Quest asked, eagerly. "West Kensington-No. 17 Princess

Court road. There was a young lady here yesterday afternoon inquiring for Quest raised his hat. It was a relief, at any rate, to have news of Lenora. "I am very much obliged to you, madam."

"You're welcome!" was the terse re-

Quest save a new address to the direst gave a new address to the taxi driver and was nearcely able to restrain his impatience during the long drive. They pulled up at last before a admewhat dingy-looking house. He rang the bell, which was answered by a trim-looking little maldservant. "Is Mrs. Willet in?" he inquired.

÷. . 2

amazed at his own sensations, con scious of fears and emotions of which he would never have believed himself capable. He gave in his card, and after a few moments' delay he was shown into the presence of one of th chiefs of the detective department, who greated him warmly.

"My name is Hardaway," the latter announced.

"My assistant, a young lady, Miss Lenora MacGougal, has disappeared! She and I and Professor Ashleigh left the steamer at Plymouth and traveled up in the boat train. It was stopped at Hamblin road for the professor and mysalf, and Miss Macdougal came on to Londor. She was staying at Cilf-ford's hotel in Payne street for the night, and then going on to the aunt. Well, I've found that aunt. She was expecting the girl, but the girl never appeared. "Where did this aunt live?" Hardaway inquired. "No. 17, Frincess Court road, West Kensington," Quest replied. "She had just moved there from Elsmere road, Hampstead. I went first to Hampstead. Lenora had been there and learned her aunt's correct address in West Kensington. I followed on to West Rensington and found that the sunt was still awaiting her."

Consecutives.

against whom we fight!' "It's

"What do you mean?" Quest deimpossible for anyone to leave the manded.

The professor wrung his hands, Hardaway paused to consider a mo-"I put him in our James II prison.' he declared. "Why should I "Look here," Quest suggested, "they think of the secret passage? No know all of you, of course, and they'll never let you in until they're forced one has used it for a hundred years. He found it learned the trick-I'm a stranger. Let me go. I'll

'You mean," Quest cried---"He has escaped!" the professor broke in. "Craig has escaped again! They are searching for him high and

All right, he assented. "We shall follow yeu up pretty closely, though." Quest stapped back into the taxi and gave the driver a direction. When he emerged in front of the handsome gray low, but he has cone!" Quest's arm tightened for a moment in Lenora's. It was curious how he stone house he seemed to have be seemed to have lost at that moment come completely transformed. There all sense of proportion. Lenora was was a fatuous smile upon his lips. He safe the relief of that one safe . . . the rollef of that one thought overshadowed everything else crossed the pavement with difficulty, stumbling up the steps, and held on in the world. the knocker with one hand while be

"The fellow can't get far." he muttered.

"Who knows?" the professor re plied, dolefully.

They had been standing together in a little recess of the hall. Suddenly Lenora, whose face was turned toward the entrance doors, gave a little cry. She took a quick step forward. "Laura!" she exclaimed, wonder-ingly. "Why, it's Laura!" They all turned around. A young woman had just entered the hotel, followed by a porter carrying some luggage. Her arm was in a sling and there was a bandage around her forehead. She walked, too, with the helr of a stick. She recognized them at once and waved it gayly. "Hullo, you people!" she cried.

"You're the lady whose name is on this piece of paper?" he demanded. "This place is all right, ch?" "Soon run you to earth, eh?" They were for a moment dum founded. Lenora was the first to find words. "But when did you start, Laura?" she asked. "I thought you "I really do not know what you mean," the woman replied coldly;"but if you will come inside I will talk with were too iil to move for w.eks.

The girl smiled contemptuously "I left three days after you, on the the front door, had it now wide open. and in a moment the ball seemed full. Kaisor Frederic," she replied. way some trouble at Plymouth, and Quest Secures Him in a Moment.

board your steamer," Quest explained. Please take us on board."

The captain shook his head. "Are you from Scotland Yard?" he asked. "Have you got your warrant?" "We are from America," Quest answered, "but we've got a Scotland Yard man with us and a warrant, right enough." The cantain shook his head

"I am over an hour late." he said "and it's costing me fifty pounds a minute. If I take you on board, you'll have to come right along with me, un less you find the fellow before we've left your tub behind." Quest turned around.

"Will you risk it?" he asked," "Yes!" they all replied. "We're coming, captain," Quest de-

A rope ladder was let down. The teamer began to slow down. The captain spoke, once more to by pilot and came down from the elded.

bridge. "I'm forced to go full speed ahead to cross the bar," he told Quest, "I'm scrry, bit the tide's just on the turn." They looked at, one another a little blankly. The professor, however, beamed upon them all. "I have always understood," Le said, "Lint Port Said is a most interesting place."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

