"No one has ever accused the Germans of being lacking in far sighted-ness. They are already looking for-ward to what will happen when peace is restored and that they will make a supreme effort to recover their lost trade with other nations cannot be doubted. Is it reasonable to believe that they would look with complacency upon the absolute control of the cotton market by the mills of England and America, permitting them very low prices and defer their own purchases until after peace is made and take the chances of securing then their own stocks at much higher prices? Is it not reasonable to believe that they will arrange to buy cotton as the spinners of other nations buy it and can they not easily arrange to have their cotton purchases stored in this country for their account until they can transport it to "Present conditions," he said, "fully justify low rates and Southern bank-ers should be willing to forego temporary profits for the sake of se-curity and solidity in the future. I am sure that the federal reserve banks may be depended upon under their power of reliscounting to cooperate to the fullest extent with the banks in taking care of the control cross and taking care of the cotton crop and this assurance is, of course, not con-fined to cotton leans but extends to other staple commodities.

"It is now a matter of public knowledge that the British government and its allies have declared cotton an absolute contrabard. By that it is understood that cotton will be subject to salary a contrabate to salary and the salary of the salar the shipment is made in accordance with the terms and limitations of the proclamation declaring it contraband. As the annuar takings of American cotton by Austria and Germany amount to about 3,000,000 bates, the attitude of Great Britain and her attitude of Great Britain and her allies has created much uncertainty in the cotton trade and great apprehension on the part of cotton producers in the South."
