Why You Should Use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Because it has an established reputation won by its good works. Because it is most esteemed by those who have used it for many years, as occasion required, and are best acquainted with its good qualities.

Because it loosens and relieves a cold and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. Because it does not contain opium or any other narcotic.

Because it is within the reach of all. It only costs a quarter. For sale by all dealers.

HOSPITAL SHIPS ONLY COMFORT IN THE BALKANS

Aboard the French Hospital Ship Charles Roux, Harbor of Saloniki, Dec. 11.—Quite the most agreeable fate that can overtake an allied soldier in the Balkan campaign is to be ill—or slightly wounded. Not that the hospital facilities of the ancient Turkish city are famous, or even adequate. They are not. But there are four French and one British hospital ship in the roads of Saloniki and they constitute by far the most comfortable not to say the only sanitary spot in the Balkan peninsula.

The French have been better prepared from the very outset of the present Balkan campaign in every detail of military organization than their British allies. No better example of the thoroughness of this preparation could be given than the arrangements for caring for the sick and wounded. Long before there was actually any need for it and simultaneously with the landing of the first contingent of French troops on Greek soil, the French hospital ship Sphinx was lying ready in the harbor of Saloniki. As the number of troops disembarked increased, automatically more hospital ships put in an appearance. First the Duway Troin, with its sheltered decks and its high stern like the poop of a Spanish galleon, all porches and awnings and lounging places for the convalescent; next the ship, the Charles Roux, with its operating rooms, its surgical clinics and its complete provision for the care of the more seriously wounded; and finally the Canada—all with full complement of nurses, surgeons, physicians, sisters of charity and all the rest of the paraphernalia of the aftermath of battle.

In many ways the Charles Roux is the most interesting, especially as it is the principal operating theatre of the floating hospitals of Saloniki, and especially as the surgeon major, Dr. Helitz-Boyer, is one of the most distinguished and best known surgeons in Paris. The ship was converted from one of the larger passenger steamers that in time of peace made the voyage from Marseilles to Algiers. As such, it is roomy enough for not only have the saloons not required as operating chambers been turned into wards to add to the accommodations of the cabins, but the great broad decks have been glassed in, making the most agreeable of sun-parlors in which cots are set in long rows so that the sick and wounded, in the warmth of the afternoon sun, may lie quiet and look out at the splendid view the Bay of Saloniki affords.

Here too, the convalescent, propped up with pillows sheltered excellently from wind and competently nursed by volunteer French women who have passed the necessary examinations and had the requisite experience, gather strength against the time when they may go back and "have another go at 'em," as the "pollu" in the next cot to the Associated Press correspondent put it. Under such circumstances the wounded soldier has all the advantages and none of the drawbacks of "the Naples of the Orient" as its inhabitants call Saloniki. If his cot is on the south side of the ship, he has before him the now snowcapped crests of the mountains of Katchik, those three fingers of land that stretch into the Aegean, with convent-crowned Mt. Athos tipping the last fingers. Or, to the west, confers with the clouds, he has the peaks of Thessaly—Mt. Olympus, the home of the gods of ancient Greece and beyond Mt. Ossa, and perhaps even, dim in the distance, Mt. Pelion, both of mythological fame. The rare and changing beauty of the clouds above these snow-capped heights, the singular coloring of the sunsets are joys to the patients aboard the French hospital ships in no wise lessened by the odors, the noises and the discomforts of life ashore in Saloniki.

On the other hand, should the patient be placed on the north side of the ship, the view is no less attractive. Saloniki itself, charming from a distance, straggling along the curving shore, mounting the hill behind the town to the walled citadel that caps its crest—dozens of exquisite white minarets like altar candles proud and slim, their balconies hung with lanterns against the fête of Ramadan; long uneven rows of mysterious houses, with projecting, latticed balconies; walled and secret gardens, revealing only the lofty monument of a single cypress, barren spots on the peopled hillside that are cemeteries, the grey-white of their jumbled headstones gleaming in the morning sun.

Below decks, all is ready for any and every operation. Every kind of electric light gives the surgeon all the facilities necessary for searching wounds. Rows of glass cases contain shining instruments, while porcelain tables display glass dishes for sterilizing the instruments, each dish covered with a heavy glass plate to keep out any extraneous substance. Each specialist has his own operating room, in addition to which there is a very complete pharmacy, a biological laboratory, an X-ray apparatus with the necessary facilities for photographing the insides of the patient and a perfectly equipped darkroom to develop the photographs. In completion of the picture, there are the silent, efficient little sisters of charity, their great, white, wing-like head dresses bobbing and nodding as the wearers hurry hither and thither, a chain upon which are hung the keys to the supply closets dangling from their waists, a tin of baked and sterilized bandages under one arm—or a packet of books and magazines destined for some convalescent patient.

All of this is the work of the women of France—the organization known as "Succor for Wounded Soldiers" whose committee even now is in Saloniki, looking after arrangements, criticizing, making suggestions and charging themselves with securing from the great hearts of the French women all that may be needed to see that the soldiers of the French republic, however far they may be from home, shall have every proper care and comfort.

AT THE THEATRES

AT THE ANDERSON

"Never Say Die."

That effective natural actor, Mr. Nat G. Goodwin is announced by the local management to appear at the Anderson on Thursday for one night only.

This is easily one of the most important engagements on the list of this season's theatricals, and it behooves the home town theatre-goers to be a live to "what's doing" and not miss this, possibly their last opportunity to see America's foremost actor; for, be it known Mr. Goodwin has contemplated abandoning the long arduous road tours more than once; only the insistent demands of the booking syndicate induce him to reconsider, for he realizes that when the time comes that he confines his season exclusively to New York, Chicago and a very few metropolitan cities, the disappointment to the community at large will be paramount, while the financial loss to many would be conspicuously significant.

For the occasion of this visit Mr. Goodwin will be seen in his three plays success, "Never Say Die," a farcical comedy in three acts, by Wm. H. Post.

Three plays is used not injudiciously, for "Never Say Die" had a sold year's success in London at the Apollo Theatre, while it is now in its heyday of a six months' voyage in Australia. New York approved of it for six months, while it had all last season on tour its striking comedy comedy an accumulation of praise for both the star and the play, which augurs well for any fortunate enough to be among those present on the forthcoming engagement.

The mother lode of the comedy drapes itself easily on the broad shoulders of Nat Goodwin, but that is what he is there for, and that is as it should be.

SUMMARY OF REPORT OF SURGEON GENERAL

Public Health Service Records
Largest Amount Work in Its History.

Washington, Dec. 15.—The annual report of the surgeon general of the United States public health service records the largest amount of work performed in the history of that organization. Since the passage of the law of 1912 the public health functions of the service have materially broadened, thereby increasing greatly its usefulness to the American people. Throughout the report the economic importance of disease prevention is made apparent to the reader.

Perhaps the most important achievement of the year was the discovery that pellagra is a deprivation disease, resulting from a faulty diet containing an excess of carbohydrates. While the final experiments which led to this discovery have only recently been completed, the conclusion itself is the culmination of investigations extending over a period of seven years. The work has consisted of epidemiological field studies, actual feeding experiments conducted at numerous places in Georgia and Mississippi, and experimental research at Sparanburg, South Carolina, and other places.

A new national quarantine station was opened at Galveston, Texas, and the control of the Boston station was transferred to the public health service. A great reduction in immigration has been observed during the year, with a corresponding increase in the number of aliens certified. At the port of New York, the percentage has risen from 2.29, previous to the development of the European conflict, to 5.37 since that time; this increase largely being due to the fact with the decreased immigration more can be devoted to the examination of aliens. The number of cases treated at marine hospitals and relief stations exceeded 55,000, a considerable increase over previous years. The coast guard cutter "Androsogonia" was fitted out as a hospital ship and now affords relief to deep sea fishermen on the banks of Newfoundland.

On the occurrence of plague at New Orleans, the first outbreak upon the Gulf seaboard, the state and local health authorities requested the public health service to take charge of the situation. Extensive rat-proofing and other anti-plague measures were undertaken, resulting in the eradication of the disease of the rodent infection.

Great reduction in the incidence of malaria was obtained in localities where surveys were conducted. Drainage projects, rice culture studies and the conditions surrounding the impounding of water for power purposes were investigated in order to eradicate as far as possible the disease in these areas. Scientific investigations of malarial infection showed that in the latitude of this country the most important agent in carrying the infection through the winter season is man, and not the infected, hibernating, anopheles mosquitoes as was previously supposed. From the standpoint of prevention this is a discovery of considerable value.

Studies of occupational diseases and industrial hygiene were instituted at several places during the year. A survey of the industries of tuberculosis among industrial workers. The investigations relating to the migration of persons suffering from tuberculosis were completed.

Upon request of the health authorities of five states, the organization and operations of the respective boards of health were studied and recommendations advanced for improvement in the powers and duties of these bodies. The health organizations of several cities were likewise investigated.

Investigations of the pollution of streams and the examination of shellfish were also conducted. Trachoma was combated in the Appalachian mountains, where it is most prevalent, over 12,000 cases being treated. Surveys in certain states during the year showed that the disease is not an uncommon infection.

Rural sanitation work was conducted in six different states and everywhere resulted in the reduction of typhoid and other communicable diseases.

Public health laboratories for the prevention of the interstate spread of disease were established at Chicago, Seattle, and numerous other railway centers. Additional duties have been imposed upon the service by extension of relief benefits to the newly organized coast guard and the physical examination of seamen applying for the rating of "able seaman." For this reason, and because of the greatly increased health functions of the service, an increase in the commised personnel is recommended. An additional building for the hygienic laboratory and the establishment of a national leprosanarium for the proper segregation and care of cases of leprosy are also recommended.
