A certain affluent Bachelor happened to be the only Grandson of a rugged Early Settler who wore a Coon-Skin Cap and drank Corn Juice out of a Jug. Away back in the Days when every Poor Man bad Ba on in the Smoke House, this Jione it had been soaked in a Trade and found himself loaded up with a Swamp Subdivision in the Edge of Town.

Fifty years later the City had spread two miles beyond the Swamp and Grandson was submerged beneath so much Uncarned Increment that he began to speak with what sounded to him like an English Accent and his Shirts were ordered from Paris.

On the 1st of every Month the Agents would crawl into the Presence of the Grandson of the mighty Muskrat Hunter and dump before him a Wagonload of Paper Money which had been snatched away from the struggling Shop-Keepers, who in turn, had wheedled it from the People who paid a Nickel apiece for Sunday Papers so as to look at the Pictures of the Decorations in the Supper Room at the As-sembly Ball graced by the Presence of the aforesaid Bachelor whose Grandfather had lifted the original Cattish out of the Chicago River.

Then the Representative of the Old Family would take a Garden Rake and pattern all this hateful Currency into neat mound, after which a milk-fed Secretary would from it out and disinfect it and sprinkle it with Lilac Water and tie it into artistic Packets, using Cld Gold Ribbon.

After that, it was Hard Lines for the Bachelor, because he had to sit by a Window at the Club and dope out some new Way of getting all that Coin back into Circulation.

As a result of these Herculean Efforts to vaporize his Income, he found himself at the age of 40 afflicted with Social Gastritis. He had gorged himgelf with the Pleasures of this World until the sight of a Menu Card gave him the Willies and the mere mention of Musical Comedy would cause him to break down and Cry like a Child.

has there been chronicled a more im-pressive or pathetic tragedy than the untimely end of Walter Browne, the brilliant author of the modern morality play "Everywoman," We are told that on the very day of its first performance, almost within hearing of that welcome sound to a dramatist's ear, the resounding applause of an appreciative public, his spirit winged its flight and he never knew the labe of the craft on his marvelous mind, on which the untiring efforts of months, even years, had been bestowed. For the third time in four seasons this spectacular, thought pro-Boulevard of Pleasure and the Night voking sumptously staged-play was Wind cuts like a Chisel and the presented to a splendid audience that listened with breathless attention to its every line fraught with truth and poetic beauty, and giving ample tes-timony that, though the flesh be mortal, the spirit and soul of the hapless dramatist, as embodied in his eloquent message to mankind, will remain ever verdant through the passing of years. The story of this beautiful allegory, his modern woman's 'Pilgrim's Prog-gress,' is so familiar that a recapitula tion would be out of place. How with her companions, Youth, Beauty and Modesty, she sets out from her home in search of Love, offspring of Trutt. Warned, guided and attended throughout the pilgrimage by Nobody and hecility only Flattery, she is con-fronted by Pazsion and Wealth, in neither of whom Love resides. Deserted in her quest in turn by Mod-esty, Beauty and Youth, she finally on the brink of utter despair, recoglizes and embraces Truth, whom she first scorned, and, returning to her own firestle, finds Love keeping the embers aglow and waiting with ex-haustless, patience for homecoming They were Married according to the signalized also by the return of Mod-
