REFUGEES CROWD FRENCH CITIES

Government Now Carling For Nearly a Million Persons.

LIVE ON 25 CENTS A DAY.

Included Among These Are 143,000 Belgians and 11,000 Servians—Others Come From Fortified French Cities Near Battle Lines—Some Earn Own Living.

Nearly a million people, the exact figures being 928,000, who have been driven from their homes are scattered throughout France and draw allowances from the government, half the number being under sixteen years of age. The greatest number, 702,000, are French, refugees from the invaded departments, from the fortified towns which could no longer keep "useless mouths" and from the danger zone of the front. The Belgians number 143,000; Alsace and Lorraine have sent 12,600 and Servia 11,000.

In addition to these refugees who need state aid, there are about 120,000 who have means of their own, but these decrease as their means become exhausted.

The first class of refugees to be aided was the "useless mouths" from fortresses like Maubeuge, Verdun, Toul, Epinal and Belfort. Before the war had lasted a fortnight 25,000 of these had to be provided with homes elsewhere.

After the battle of Charleroi and the rapid onrush of the Germans 115,000 Belgians and French had to be sent to the rear, and when Paris was threatened with an attack early in September 15,000 who had built homes within the zone of the capital's fortifications had to be moved.

Live With Private Families. Refugees were first installed in empty buildings, schoolhouses, etc., but it was soon found that some regular principle must be adopted, and every family not touched by the war was called upon to receive a refugee family, the state paying the expenses.

The battle of the Marne slackened the inflow of refugees for a time, but when operations moved to the north the number became so great that they had to be moved not only by train, but by ships, which carried them from Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne to La Pallice, whence they were distributed among the southwest departments. Many families who had been taken to Germany from the invaded districts were returned via Switzerland and had to be provided for.

The money aid given to refugees has been fixed at the same rate as the allowance made to the wives and families of mobilized soldiers, 25 cents a day for each adult and 10 cents for each child under sixteen.

When refugees had settled down and could earn something by their labor a difficult question had to be solved. It would manifestly be unfair to suppress the grant of a poor woman who could only earn, say, 25 cents a day, and yet those who could earn a living wage (and it must be remembered that the war had caused a great demand for labor) could not expect to receive a grant in addition. The question was left to the prefect of the department to decide with the aid of three members of a committee formed to distribute aid in kind the gifts of private individuals, benevolent societies, etc. No hard and fast rules were laid down, but any refugee who without valid excuse refused any offer of work which was properly paid and suited his or her capacities had the allowance suppressed.

Many refugees have found well paid work in munition factories and have thus been able to maintain themselves and co-operate directly toward their return to their old homes.

SON'S DEATH LIKE GRANT'S.

Former President's Smoking Habit Taken Up by Younger Man.

The real cause of the death of General Frederick D. Grant on April 1, 1912, was made public for the first time the other day. He died of cancer of the throat superinduced by the excessive use of tobacco. His father, General U. S. Grant, died from the same cause, and the malignant growth was attributed to the same agency.

The facts regarding the death of the younger Grant are contained in the following paragraph from an article by Dr. Robert Abbe of New York, senior surgeon to St. Luke's hospital, who was with him when he died, on "The Legacy of the Intemperate Use of Tobacco," which appeared in the Medical Record:

"I could not help reminding him (a patient) that one of our great national heroes smoked incessantly, as every one knew, and suffered and died from the consequences of disease of his throat. His distinguished son, also a heroic figure in our army, adopted the same habit, smoked equally incessantly, and suffered and died of the same terrible consequences. This is a heavy price to pay for the intemperate indulgence of such a throat irritating and narcotic habit."

The habit of smoking, even when occasional, has been shown to be a very serious factor in the causation of cancer of the throat and lungs, and it is a heavy price to pay for the intemperate indulgence of such a throat irritating and narcotic habit.
