The Honor System at the University of South Carolina is something that every alumni and every student is proud of. Indeed they should be proud. As seen in the "History of the Honor System at South Carolina College," there has been a system of honor here since the founding of the college in 1805. It has gradually developed until we have our present system of honor.

The honor system as we speak of it daily on the campus means, that no student shall receive aid, which effects his or her class standing, in any unfair way, shape or form. This refers to the everyday classes as well as to the examinations. It means also that every student is bound to report every other student who he sees receiving aid in an unfair manner. This is no little thing and every student should think it over seriously.

Last year the mode of procedure in the trial of a man who was suspected of unfair practice was changed. Heretofore the class to which the suspected one belonged tried him. But since the college has become a university it was seen that this system would not work successfully. Now we have what is called "The Honor System Committee." It is composed of one member from each class and acts as an investigating committee. If upon investigation the committee finds the student reported to them guilty, it in turn reports to the student body, and the student body acts accordingly.

It has ever been the aim of this institution to send forth men who are not only perfected in scholarship, but also ever mindful of the obligations of truth and honor. Her highest lesson might well be summed up in the following sentiment:

"Who misses all,

Who wins the prize,

Go lose, go conquer

If you can;

But if you fall or if you rise,

Be each—pray God—a gentleman."

The new administration building, for which the Legislature appropriated $30,000.00 last year, is under construction. It is going to be a handsome structure and will be a great addition to the University. We think, however, that the Trustees could have selected a more convenient and suitable location.

Prof. G. B. Moore, in Ethics, Saturday morning was asking Senior Cooper to illustrate the difference between wish and will by an example from Shakespeare, and spoke thus: "Who was it that Lady Macbeth wished to murder, and why did she not will the deed?"

Senior Cooper—"She wished to murder Hamlet, but could not do it because he was her husband."

SWAFFIELD-DYCHES.

From The State.

Yesterday at the home of the bride, on Sumter street, was solemnized the marriage of Miss Sarah Briggs Swaffield and Mr. Martin Capers Dyches, the quiet, impressive ceremony being performed in the presence of the immediate family and a few relatives by the groom's brother, Rev. J. W. H. Dyches, D. D., pastor of the Baptist church in Keysville, Va.

The house was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The wide reception hall, extending the length of the house, was done in gold effect with long stalks of yellow cannas and sheaves of stately goldenrod paneling the stairway and the walls and bright gold dahlias filling bowls and jars everywhere. In the parlor, where the ceremony was performed, graceful smilax draped the walls and white and pale pink roses were everywhere in profusion. Back in the dining room a combination of pink and deep red roses was used with most artistic effect and the table from which refreshments were served was banked in the centre with them and was lighted with brightly burning red tapers held in quaint old silver candelabra.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. William C. Swaffield, and was unattended, the ceremony being simple in every detail. She wore a smart tailored suit of green and blue invisible check voile in one of the new models, with a stylish hat combining in Frenchy style the two colors.

On the afternoon before her marriage the bride-elect was at home to her cousins and a very few intimate friends at an afternoon tea, the affair being quite informal and private.

Mr. and Mrs. Dyches left yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock over the Southern for the mountains, where they will spend several weeks before returning to Columbia to make their home.

Mr. Dyches is an alumnus of the University and has continued his connection with the University as marshal. Recently he has purchased an attractive home on College street and he and his bride will go immediately to housekeeping on their return to Columbia.

The bride is widely known and much admired in Columbia, and her marriage, though it was exclusively private, was of much interest to her many friends.
