The kick was blocked by Carolina and Capt. Gonzales got possession of the ball and gained an almost open field for a while. kicked to Hammond, who returned the kick. Charleston kicked again and it was DesPortes' ball on the 15-yard line. The game was over. Score: Carolina 17; Charleston College 0.

An analysis of the game shows that Carolina made distance something like 15 times while Charleston College made the required distance on plays but twice. There were no real stellar plays during the game, except, possibly, the long run by Gonzales. Several of the boys played steady, consistent ball, as Belser at half and Dargan at end for Carolina. Perrin netted good gains, as the details of the game show. The line men were very much more aggressive in yesterday's game than they were the Saturday before and, as stated, a number of line plays were pulled off successfully.

Carolina's next game is with the University of Georgia, which is played at Athens next Saturday.

All the University rooters had their voices keyed to the top notch, and when the team deserved cheering it came with full force. The spectators in the grandstand were able to see most of the game, but it would be far better if the supporters of the Garnet and Black would not let their spirits get away with them and rush out on the field at times.
