Prof. Keith, in Second French—"They say, Mr. Graydon, that after you are twenty-one years old, you never can learn to speak French correctly?"

Fresh Graydon—"Why, that's nothing, Professor, I knew a Frenchman in Greenwood once who had been here twenty-five years and couldn't speak a word of English."

Prof. Keith—"Well, Mr. Graydon, he must have been exceptionally dull."

Fresh Graydon—"No, sir; Professor, he was only dumb."

Senior Lee—"Lucy Cobb is in Athens, isn't it?"

Junior Parrott—"Is she Ty Cobb's sister?"

"No, she is his wife."

Dr. Moore (in Ethics)—"Miss Yarborough, give a classical instance, where the definite law of the State comes into collision with the more customary principle of family affection."

Miss Yarborough—"A classical instance of such a conflict is found in the ANTIGONE of Sophocles. He (Antigone) prefers the latter, because it is of immemorial antiquity and its origin cannot be traced, whereas the law makes and unmakes itself."
