to season. Sometimes they will print small multi-colored polka-dots on white bleached cloth, or some small floral patterns. At another time the trend will be to stripes, using a great variety from little pin-stripes all the way to wide blazer stripes an inch wide or more.

There are print designs on our cloth based on history, or old pottery and china designs. Sometimes they use paisley prints, adapted from old patterns from India, China and the Far and Near East. They use typically American designs and old Indian ideas, and often comb the entire world for new thoughts and ideas to make fabrics attractive and different.

Many times we see cloth from Clinton and Lydia after it is finished by our customers, and it is almost impossible to recognize that these beautiful fabrics were gray goods produced at Clinton, S. C. Although I have mentioned dresses a good deal, the same applies to men's, women's and children's underwear, pajamas, aprons and almost everything worn. Often our converting customers put as much money in the styling and finishing of a piece of cloth as the cost of the original fabric, but it certainly makes a tremendous amount of difference in the demand for our fabrics.

New Overseer Joins Clinton

Clinton Cotton Mills this month welcomes Roy W. Ivester as its new cloth room overseer.

Mr. Ivester began his duties June 1, coming highly recommended from a number of other South Carolina mills. He began his textile career as a stitcher tender at Gluck Mills, Anderson. He ran all jobs in the cloth room there, working up to second hand, a job he held for eight years. While at Gluck he spent 21 months in the Navy.

He also served as overseer of the cloth room at Jackson Mills, Calhoun Mills and Riverdale Mills, coming to Clinton from Riverdale.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivester have three children and are living on Elizabeth Street.
