PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLICATION BY SUBSCRIPTION
In the Town Columbia, (S. C.)
A WEEKLY MISCELLANY, TO BE CALLED

THE SOUTHERN LITERARY REGISTER,

By ANDREW J. CLINE.

THIS paper will be principally devoted to History, Biography, Criticism, Moral and Religious Essays, Poetry, and the Fine Arts. Agricultural, Medical, and other articles, which may be thought of general interest, will likewise be admitted, together with such matter of wit and amusement as may be judged useful or entertaining. A general Summary of Politics will be added each week, and a Monthly List of New Publications at the end of every fourth number.

The inducements which have led the editor to issue proposals for a publication of this nature, are such as he believes to warrant the undertaking. The wealth, refinement, and literature of the southern states; the genius and erudition of numbers, who either hold important offices under government, or are at the head of the literary institutions established among us; and the rapidly increasing taste for learning, and the arts, which is spreading among all classes of people, are the proud evidences of a flourishing and improved state of society, and afford him abundant encouragement to hope for a successful prosecution of his plan. It is a little remarkable, perhaps, that the making of this kind has been so long neglected, and that when many instances of literary papers have attempted to supply the want, they have failed, and soon with the dry detail and confusion of political tracts, as one should have thought, containing the news, and establishing a general repository for the reception and circulation of useful and polite literature. As far as the editor and the means of information, he is acquainted with no paper published south of Baltimore which bears the character of the one he has in contemplation, and as Columbia is nearly the central situation between North Carolina and Georgia, this place embraces superior local advantages to many others, and particularly favorable to the wide distribution of such a paper through this and the neighboring states.

In prosecuting this view it will be the editor's constant aim to furnish it with such matter only as may be of general utility, or interesting and important in account of the ability and merit which it may display. He will firmly resist any importunity from private individuals or individuals, worth whatever honor or fame may be attached to their names, who may wish to be inserted in the Register. A constant regard will be had to the moral tendency of every article, whether original or selected; and however striking the value and interest of a writer may seem, these will never be considered as making up for a general looseness of expression, or a want of sense and propriety in the management of his subject. Party disputes, and the discussion of politics, will be excluded.

THE REGISTER will be published every Friday, on a fine super-royal sheet of paper, and will contain four columns per page, and will contain thirty-two pages in every number.

As the price of every six months a title paper, on a fine super-royal sheet of paper, will be $2.00, and the delivery of the paper will be made at the rate of one dollar per month, and the delivery of the paper will be made at the rate of one dollar per month.
