Reply to Hon. J. B. Campbell's Letter to the Colored People.

BY A COLORED REPUBLICAN.

Mr. Editor—I have just read in the Charleston Daily News, a letter from the Hon. J. B. Campbell, addressed to Mr. F. Ford, Chairman of the Democratic Club at Aiken, and to be read especially by the colored people. I propose to answer a few of the most striking points made by this great democratic giant. He says: "Next to the emancipation of my own race from the [illegible] vulgar slavery now being attempted by traitors to their country, I have felt a sincere and affectionate interest in the prosperity and happiness of the colored race. We owe it to ourselves for past services, we owe it to the [illegible] to the sake of the past. We owe it to ourselves for the sake of our children and our country, and to the principles of liberty which we fought to establish, to secure to the colored man, who has come to us from the midst of the war, and who was associated with us during the war, and who has been faithful to us since the war."

This bright exponent of the principles of the Democratic party is known by many colored men to be regarded in the history of that party as a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
