WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 29, 1868.

With one accord the people throughout the country now [illegible] the election of Grant and Colfax, and many persons believe that the [illegible] able to carry more than [illegible] Delaware, Maryland and [illegible] saw, last night, an [illegible] on the result.

The copperhead leaders, under the influence of the late disasters, have turned, like the Kilkenny cats, upon each other and the prospect is quite that, before November, there will be little left of the party. One wing is urging the withdrawal of Seymour, and the other the withdrawal of Blair, each wing asserting, in turn, that the one or the other of the unfortunate candidates is the millstone which has dragged the party down into the valley of humiliation and despair.

As yet there seems to be no likelihood of any change of candidates being agreed upon, for it is well known that the Blair wing of Democracy [illegible] Seymour, New York, met by appointment [illegible] at his father's residence, near Silver Springs, six miles north of this city. One of the party, it is believed, had a letter from Mr. Seymour in his pocket, declining to sell at their figures, either [illegible] Blair was the head and front of the offending, or to withdraw himself. [illegible] ostensibly with Blair, but [illegible] the ticket. [illegible] Blair [illegible] the ticket. [illegible] Democratic party [illegible] platform and [illegible] so that, [illegible] made, which [illegible] must stand upon the [illegible] platform prepared by Wade Hampton, [illegible] and adopted by the New York Party of July. Convention. Owing to the brief time before the election and the [illegible] and clumsy [illegible] it is hardly possible that any change in candidates will be made. The best we will be able to do will be [illegible] with the Republicans and [illegible] and Colfax as head [illegible] will [illegible] Forces, all fragments must [illegible] the North or South. Within the last twenty-four hours I have seen at least fifty Southern papers of the fire-eating persuasion, and all, without important exception, are disposed to yield to the logic of events. In a word, the Southern fire-eaters are as humble as when Lee surrendered his armies to Grant. On the 13th, a Petersburg paper urged the people of Virginia to vote for Pendleton, and to insist upon the vote being counted. On the 14th, after hearing the result of the elections, the editor, in another article, took back all he had before said, and gave as a reason for doing so, that Gen. Grant was sure to be elected, and it was best not to run counter to the views of the dominant party.

Government securities have risen in value since the late elections, and already an era of good feeling has commenced. Even the copperheads in Government employ here, and their name is legion, freely concede, from the heads of bureaus down to the messengers, that the election of Grant is certain; and some of those among them who abused him the most while they had a single ray of hope that he would be defeated, now acknowledge that they think he will make a good President, and give peace to the country.

If the election in four States has produced such result, what may we not expect after the 3d of November next? Specie payments will be resumed at an early day, and thus one-half of the financial difficulty will be disposed of. Our stocks will rise in value, and, under the influence of the era of good feeling that will necessarily follow, Northern and Foreign immigration, with Northern capital, will rush into the South, and make the [illegible] that section [illegible] of the influence of [illegible] and before [illegible] the [illegible] which [illegible] the party will be dispossed of, the United States will be a Republic, in fact as well as in name, and those who opposed the Party of Progress will wonder at their past blindness.
