The Asheritle Connection The people of Greenville; properly us. derstanding the vast advantages that would result to them by the construction of the The advantages to be reaped by the people of Greenville County, apon the construction of the Greenville and Columbia Ruilroad to Asheville, North Carolina, are seeond only in benefit to the Air-Line; indeed, we do not ere in saying that it is enterprise, great as that is. The Alf-Line will give us through rail connection with New York and New Orleans; but the Ashe ville Connection opens to our doors the Great West, with its tremendous grain and hog crops, a vast trade and commerce. The cars will at no distant day be running to Asheville from Wolf Creek, the point where they now reach, and it but remains for us to build the road a few miles, and the work is completed. We have spoken of this matter before, and what have our citizens done towards furthering the project f Spartanburg is working to have the connection, and if she is successful, the loss to us will be incalculable. Our people must wake up, or "the Queen City of the Mountains" will be surpassed by superior enterprise; and testead of being of first importance in the upper part of the State, she will fall to that of a way-station. Greenby incorporation with Charleston and Columbia, and she owes it to herself to sustain mountains, and this will be a second At-effects will be of a thousand fold in favor much besides, for Greenville. The Courier says of it:

"We take it that Charleston is the natu al outlet to the ocean for all this region .-Take your map, draw your lines, and find, if you can, a more direct route. The French Broad, in its course through the mountaine, marks the line along which products seeking the ocean should and did move. Or. rather, we might say, that all of the stock for South Carolina, and much of it for North Carolina and Georgia, passed through Asheville. The products of the West found a market along the route before reaching the

"Letus look again at the maps and glane our eye towards the West Indies and South America, and think of how admirably Charleston is situated with a view to the wants of the West and those of the coun-West furnishes for this trade, but few think of what the mountain country could do its splendid scenery, brilliant sun sets, cool springs and invigorating summer climate are all that is thought of as belonging to it by Southern minds, intent though they may be on rebuilding the waste places. Would we make Charleston what she should be, the seat of a vast West India and South American trade! We will not do it by al lowing the products from the mountains and the West to go South, by first going North through Norfolk and Baltimore. Asheville will soon be resched by railroad from the East, and all know how hard it is to change the track of commerce.

"Let Greenville and Spartanburg unite their efforts with Charleston. Let the people of Henderson and Buncombe be roused to efforts in this their best direction. The West is met at the Tennessee line, and onethird of the work down on the French Bread from Asheville is done. Every one slong the fine and at each end is sure to be benefitted, for it is the shortest and best between the interior and the ocean.

"The water powers along its line would seen sound merrily to the clatter of its spindles, as the wool from the flocks which would cover its bills was worked up, the shrill sound of machinery would be heard in every valley, as thousands of our own race fashioned its superior woods with every form wanted."

We are glad to see that the Legislature of North Carolina has re-chartered and amended the "Greenville and French Broad Railroad," which we append. This is moving right, and we hope soon to record some substantial action from this side of the line, they make week a charact

Mr. H. is kind and attentive to those under his charge, and does all in his power to mitigate the unnecessary evils of prison life, and those now in the Greenville Jail bear testimony to his proper and lenient discharge of duty.
