

Might and Right.

BY N. C. SHEPHERD.

A monarch of great renown is Might,
And he wears an iron crown
On his kingly brow, where the furrows meet
In a grim and darkling frown.
Serrils of manner and look are they
Who bow before his throne,
With a cringing smile on each lip meanwhile,
Which no honest heart would own.

Strong and high are the iron gates
Of his walled and moated town,
Where the heads of his victims ranged above,
From hollow eyes look down,
And within the halls of his palace vast,
Amid the varied throng,
Full often is seen, with skulking mein,
The hooded shadow of Wrong.

Heavy of muscle and huge of limb,
His mailed warriors are,
Looming with visage dark and grim
In the awful front of war.
But little they count, though fierce of look,
On valor in the fight,
These warriors grim and huge of limb,
Of the terrible monarch Might.

His dungeon deep is of deepest gloom,
And its walls are red with stains,
Where often are heard loud cries of woe
And the dismal clank of chains.
And echoes sound through its grated vaults
From out the storied Past,
Which will float and flow and forward go,
As long as Time shall last.

A noble knight is the valiant Right,
With bright cuirass and shield,
Whom honor and praise each heart must own,
And every tongue must yield.
His brow is as white as the driven snow;
And his eye a bright light bears;
And no mark of rust or a trace of dust
His polished armor wears.

His strength is that of a righteous cause,
And his courage naught can quell;
While his battles fought and his victories won
What human lip may tell.
His shield is stout and his helmet strong,
His sword is tried and true;
While his honest name and his glowing fame
Are heard the wild world through.

Though sometimes borne in the onset down
By the terrible strength of Might,
Again from the torn and trampled earth
He arises from the fight.
Though fees may thicken and blows may fall,
His stern cheek never pales;
Though the lances flash and the hammer crash,
His courage never quails.

Then join his banners of light unrolled,
Ye stalwart men and strong;
Though victory rest with the foe awhile,
It will not be for long—
For thrones may totter and kingdoms fall,
And blood of kindred blend,
Yet the cause of Right over the power of Might
Must triumph in the end.

SINGULAR AND REMARKABLE CASE.

A returned soldier, who was suffering from a wound through the fleshy part of his right arm, was married about nine months since; and shortly afterwards the wound became so bad that the attending physician contemplated amputation. This worked seriously on the mind of his young wife, whose sole attention was absorbed in the thought of a one armed husband. Under her kind and affectionate care, however, the arm was saved.

Now for the sequel. The other day she gave birth to a child who had one well developed arm, but the other was a stump, similar to the one which the poor wife's mind was impressed with at the time the surgeons were talking of taking off her husband's. Amputation could not have produced a more beautiful stump, and what is more, the scar of the bullet-hole, so visible on the father's arm, was as visible on the child's arm, at the base of the stump, as if really inflicted by a ball. This is the most remarkable case of "child-mark" ever known. The child is a healthy and beautiful one, perfect in every respect, save the absence of the arm referred to.

[Albany, N. Y., Knickerbocker.]

HAS THE THING LIT?—A gawky backwoods boy was once at a depot on one of the Georgia railroads, and was, of course, deeply interested in gazing, for the first time, at the "fixins."

Finally, he got inside of the car, and while indulging his unbounded curiosity, the whistle screamed, the bell rang, and the steam horse began to surge at the rate of 2:40.

"Oh, Lordy!" shouted the boy. "Stop it! I ain't guine!" Bursting forward, he opened the door, and jumped out on the platform.

Just then the train was crossing a deep and cadaverous looking gorge on the trestle-work, and, seeing the earth and treetops beneath him, he fainted and fell. Directly he came to, and looking up to the conductor, who stood near him, he exclaimed with a sigh, "O! Lordy! stranger, has the thing lit?"

"Oh, Jemmie, an' did you never hear ev'ny spach afore the Hibernian Society?" "No, Pat, how could I, for sure I was not on the ground." "Well, Jemmie, you see I was called upon by the Hibernian Society for a spach; and, be jabers, I rose with enthusiastic cheers of thousands, and tins of thousands, with my heart overflowing with gratitude, and my eyes full of tears, and a devil of a word did I spake."

At a law club the President called an old lawyer to give as a toast the person whom he considered the best friend of the profession. "Certainly," was the response; "The man who makes his own will."

Bread for the Bones.

Bread and butter are the only articles of food of which we never tire, from early childhood to extreme old age. A pound of fine flour or Indian meal contains three times as much meat as one pound of butcher's roast beef; and if the whole product of the grain, bran and all, were made into bread, fifteen per cent. more of nutriment would be added. Unfortunately the bran, the coarsest part is thrown away, the very part which gives soundness to the teeth and strength to the brain. Five hundred pounds of flour gives to the body thirty pounds of bony element, while the same quantity of bran gives more than one hundred and twenty-five pounds. This bone is lime—the phosphate of lime—the indispensable element of health to the whole human body, from the want of the natural supply of which many persons go into a general decline. But swallowing phosphates, in the shape of powders, or in syrups, to cure these declines, has little or no effect. The articles contained in these phosphates must pass through nature's laboratory, must be subject to her manipulations in alembics specially prepared by Almighty power and skill, in order to impart their peculiar virtues to the human frame. In plainest phrase, the shortest, safest and most infallible method of giving strength to the body, bone and brain, thereby arresting disease, and building up the constitution, is to eat and digest more bread made out of the whole grain, whether of wheat, corn, rye or oats.—Halls Journal of Health.

It has been found that the inspiratory power of the lungs is greatest in men of five feet seven inches or five feet eight inches high, and decreases with greater proportion. It decreases proportionally, that is, to the weight of the body. As the air taken into the lungs is the fuel of the body, this of course is the true measure of vital power, and the fact that a man of five feet seven inches in height possesses more fuel in proportion to the amount of his muscular tissue, explains why light weights like Tom Sayers, are able to stand up against men of apparently far greater power. This is the most enduring stature. The expiratory movement of the lungs is one third stronger than the inspiratory, but the latter is the true measure of the vital.

DOWN ON THE CAT.—The Hon. Mrs. Norton, in a recently published essay, says, "The dog has his variety of moods, like his master. He is joyous, eager, sulky, angry, restless, conscious of our love or displeasure. But a cat is always the same. Equally on her guard with friend and foe—stealthily indifferent, unsympathizing—as willing to gnaw the babe in its cradle as the rat in the barn; and gliding away to attend to her own private interests, let what will be the event in the household circle. She is a daily mystery and a night annoyance. In our tame city life she is tera natura. We advertise our dogs as 'Lost or Stolen,' but we say of our cat that she is 'gone away.'"

HOW TO MAKE CANDIDATES USEFUL.—A California paper is responsible for the following "Joke." A candidate for office came upon a "poor white man," who had a vote to give, if he did have to do his own milking. The candidate asked if he should hold the cow, which seemed to be uneasy, and the old man consented. He took her by the horns and held her fast until the operation was done. "Have you had P——r (his rival) around here lately?" he asked. "Oh, yes, he's behind the barn holding the calf."

A Dutchman's temperance lecture: "I shall tell you how it was. I put mine hand on mine head, and there was von big pain. Then I put mine hand on mine pody, and there was anoder. There was very much pains in all mine pody. Then I put mine hand in mine pocket, and there was noting. So I jined mit de temperance. Now there was no more pain in mine head. The pains in mine pody was all gone away. I put mine hand in mine pocket, and there was twenty dollars. So I shall stay mit temperance."

LOST HIS BALANCE.—There are a variety of stories told at the West End clubs with reference to the late panic, for men have their jokes even upon serious subjects. A celebrated barrister, who invested a small sum in Overend & Gurney's Company, met a friend to whom he communicated his loss. "Five hundred," said the latter; "that must have quite upset you." "Not at all," responded the wit, "I only lost my balance."

A traveler in Michigan was accosted by a little beggar girl for alms at the depot. He put his hand in his pocket to give her a pittance, when he discovered that he had been robbed of his wallet containing several thousand dollars. He told the little girl he had no money, whereupon a pick-pocket approached and restored the missing wallet, remarking that he could not rob a charitable man. The little beggar got a hundred dollar note.

"Your fat is all in the fire," said a corpulent stump speaker, of three hundred pounds averdupois, addressing himself to his opponent. "If yours were we should have a foretaste of the general conflagration," replied the latter.

Why are a country girl's cheeks like good print dresses? Because they are warranted to wash and retain their color.
