Love knocked at the door of my heart th' other day, And made a most dreadful din, I have wandered," says he, "far out of my way,

"Oh pray, sir, do let me in !"

You villain," I cried, "go away from my door ; "Don't I know your tricks of old ? I remember the time when you came here before,

" And the same sad story told.

The door of my heart I then opened wide, "As I never yet was rude,

And set you down by the warm fireside, "And what was your gratitude ?

'Your spirits rising higher and higher "With the good cheer you found, 'You set the combustible dwelling on fire, "And then laughed and danced all around.

And when Reason came, with huge piles of snow "And proffered her wintry aid. An arrow keen you shot from your bow, "And wickedly slew the wise maid.

Pale Grief came next, like a friend well tried, "While the tears o'er her cheeks did roll, But you dash'd down her pail with its copious tide "So the mansion was burnt to a coal.

mine their original identity.

But it is their astonishing magnitude, and vests them with so much grandeur to the truly reflecting mind. The astronomer, Mayer, observed one in 1758, of which he says, "Ingens macula in sole conspiciebatur cujus diameter=1.20 diam. solis," which would be more than forty-five thousand miles in diameter; and some spots have been described by observers, of inferior authority, as being yet of greater magnitude. Indeed it has been pretty clearly established that no object on the sun of a less circumference than 1,395 miles can be discerned by us at all; and if we compare a scarcely discernible joint with those spots on the sun's disk which are familiar to all who have been in the practice of the solar telescope, the 45,000 miles diameter of many of them will not be a difficult credendum in our astronomical creed.

Since many of these largest spots close up, contract to a point, and entirely disappear in two weeks, it is evident that the borders of one of whose diameter is such as we have stated, must travel with a concentrating speed of 6,000 miles a day, or 3,000 miles a day for each opposite section of circumference: which, we may be permitted to say, is pretty swift travelling in the sun. The region of the solar surface on which these large maculæ appear, is confined within the thirtieth degree from its equator. The spots which are now apparent are said to lie midway between its centre and its circumference, but we doubt the accuracy of the statement. Yet the error if it be one, is of little importance: for, in truth, every region of the solar area is ever covered with spots of greater or lesser dimension; it is And now that poor Hope, whom your treacherous completely mottled with them, though they mostly appear as the smallest perceptible points. And, what are they, one and all !---Lalande suggests that they are solar mountains, projecting beyond the luminous atmosphere; but the uniformity of the shadow around them displaces this theory, and gives rise to the more probable conjecture that they are openings through the immense surrounding medium revealing the opaque bodyof the orb. "What!' screams the little old genlm'n, turnin' wery pale. 'I see it all,' says the widder: 'in a fit of temporary insanity he rashly converted his-self into sassages?' And so he had sir," and Mr. Weller, looking steadfastly into Mr. Pickwick's horror strlken countenance, "or else he'd been draw'd into the ingine, but however that might ha' been, the little old gen'lm'n, who had been remarkably partial to sassages all his life, rushed out o' the shop in a wild state, and was never heard on arterwards."

Value of birds and reptiles .- Some of the extract from a document presented to the Massachusetts Legislature :---

It will of course be asked, what direct good may be expected from accomplishing such an object. Of what consequence is it to the farmer, to know any thing about birds, and bugs, and shells. A few examples may illustrate the importance of a zoological survey.

Some five and twenty of us accordingly made our appearance, and were made acquainted with the communication received from the Palace, naming Monday evening,23d ultimo, for the presentation.

On the evening mentioned we assembled, each in court dress-embroidered cost, chap-eau and sword. at the General's magnificent rooms, and at eight precisely drove off in a body to the Tuilleries. As there were thirty or forty of us, it took some fifteen minutes to set down, so that when ---- and I entered the peristyle of the place among the last, we found the whole body waiting on one side, the servants having ranged off opposite with the cloaks.

In a few moments, the glass doors at the foot of the grand staircase were thrown open, and, preceded by three ushers in black, we moved slowly up the stairs. The profusion of lights, the polish of the columns, statues, and sculptured walls, all of white marble, the elevation of the ceiling, the width and great length of the staircase, whose construction was a litadvantages of a general scientific survey of the like that to the private boxes of the New our territory, are pointed out in the following York Opera house, to say nothing of our own rather handsome uniforms, had mit a bad effect as we entered. At the top of the staircase we turned to the right, and stopped in an antechamber decorated " a la Louis XIV," to give our cards to three officials who were seated at a table, and who posted the names in their ledgers. This done, we entered the first room, called, since the last revolution, the gallerie Louis Philippe.
