From the German of Heine.

Where shall yet the wanderer jaded In the graye at last recline? In the South, by palm-trees shaded? Under lindens by the Rhine?

Shall I in some desert sterile Be entombed by foreign hands? Shall I sleep, beyond's life's peril, By some seacoast in the sands?

Well! God's heaven will shine as brightly There as here, around my bed, And the stars for death-lamps nightly Shall be hung above my head.

following commended: If a person swallows any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, more efficient and applicable in a larger number of cases than any half a dozen medicines we can now think of, is a beaping teaspoon of common salt, and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up, bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach, and least there be any remnant of a poison, however small, let the white Imperial attention to a trinket, remarking to be on hand Monday morning, ready of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee, be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet; because these very common articles nullify a larger number of virulent poisons than any medicines in the shops.

Success in Farming.-Much of the success we observe among the best class of farmers, says Coleman's Rural World, results from calculation skill and energy. A man to fully succeed on the farm must be an intelligent investigator. He should at least understand the character of his gratitude from a wealthy banker whom he soils, and how to handle them, and the had ennobled for largely endowing a hosbest time to do it. He should understand the principles of the laws of nature fully and clearly. He must know the remarked: 'My subjects are better off effect of each manure upon each partic- than I am. Any man can be a botch on a farm if he wills it but to have success in farming there is experience necessary than to fit a man to be a physician, merchant or lawyer.

To Young Men .-- Young man, if you wish to become somebody in the world, and hold a respectable position in society, do not stand on the street corners or in front of saloons-do not smoke constantly cheap cigars, or chew tobacco; remember young ladies don't wish to have their dicate unusual fighting proclivities and a sweet lips pressed by mouths which are saturated and shrivelled by tobacco juice; and when they swallow politely the smoke which has passed through your lungs and throat, impregnated with any bronchial affection you may have, and compare your present style to their man-
