The editress of the Barnwell county Times recen ly said, of Johnson, "Had the medical profession rather than journalism engaged our attention, instead of consulting his pulse or looking at his tongue we should, when called to attend him, have asked for a copy of his newspaper, and from it prepared a clear diagnosis of his case." We shall expect to see a he roic prescription in the Times this week. The last copy of the Standard shows an inflamed liver beyond tion. Dr. Jones would certainly be justified in administering an emetic. No, don't take it Johnson, or there will be another inquest.

COURT PROCEEDINGS.

The October term of the Court of General Sessions and Common Pleas, convened on Monday at 10, A. M. Judge Maher presiding. There was but little bustness transacted on that day, beyond the organizing of the juries, the calling of witnesses, and giving the cases to the Grand Jury, which were as follows: viz-The state vs. Burille Sanders, Larceny,-True The defendant pleads guilty of Petit Larceny.

The municipal election in Charleston last week passed off without any of the riotous acts marking the one preceeding it and resulted in the succe-s of the Republican ticket. As might have been expected, which ever party proved successful, there is much fault found with the conduct of the election officers, and the conservatives have entered a protest alleging numerous irregularities. The proceedings under the protest now are primary and do not allow of any well fermed opinion as to what the final result may be. Some of the irregularities if proved, are simply sufficient to render any election void, in regulated

The Steamer Lid, on Friday last picked up the schooner David F. Keeling, from Savannah for Baltimore, waterlogged and abandoned, eighteen miles east by south of Martins' Industry, and within ten miles of the point where the Walthan was found.

Dearborn's Gin.

Mr. Dearborn, inventor, manufacturer and agent of the Belt Cotton gin, has opened an office in Bennett's building, on Bay street, where can be seen his hand gins in runing order. He has already sold a great many of them to the colored people.

Fatal accident.

On Thursday, Sept. 25, Andrew J. Gill, aged 11 years, was caught in the gearing of a cotton gin, on the plantation of his uncle, Mr. A- J. Gill, near Varnsville. His head was crushed by the striking stirrup of the band wheel. He was instantly killed.

Royalty.

The Marine and River Phosphate Company paid into the state treasury last week, $30,000 royalty. Tomlinson was quite popular at the State House that day.

The Yellow Fever.

At Shreveport there are few deaths because the population is greatly reduced, but the epidemic seems to be unabated. At Memphis on Oct. 4, there were 42 deaths. For the week there were 240 deaths; total from fever to date 502. The Mayor appeals for aid.

On Tuesday last the mate of the schooner Addie G. Bryant, fell from the staging while hoisting ou cargo. He was badly bruised.

[For the Regulart Republican.] DEATH OF THE WARRIOR.

The conflict's din was over, That had marked that fatal day, And 'neath the evening stolight,' Many dead and dying lay.

Softly moaning out his young life, There amid that field of dead. Lay a youth, scarce sixteen summers, Having floated o'er his head.

Twas a stranger knelt above him, And in kindly accents said : He'd gladly take to distant friends, A token from their dead.

With a smile the pale lips parted, And the weary eyes grew bright, As he grasped the flag beside him, He had proudly borne in fight:

aTall my loved ones not to fuourn me. Here I swear it as I lie, In the cause of right and freedom, It is almost bliss to die.

Say I bore you banner bravely, To my very latest breath, In the thickest of the carnage, Till 'twas wrenched away by death. That the pennon of his country,

Was their youthful darling's pride,

E'en 'til both all worn and gory'. Fell together, side by side. Just sixteen years, ah! stranger, It is very young to die, But the laurels I would win on earth,

May crown me still on high Thus to die for right and freedom, Hard? nay, glorious it seems, Thus to give my life in battle Filled my brightest boyish dr

Tell my mother that I loved her,

To the end my heart was true, And thou must bid her for her son, A long, a last adieu. Stranger clasp my fingers tighter, Wrap the flag around my breast,

All grows dim around me stranger, I am weary, let me rest." Closed the languid black eyes slowly, Slowly died the smile away, And the noble soul fled gently,

With the sunlight's dying ray. Beautiful yet pale as marble, In the dying daylight's close, There he lay, his boyish features, Placid in their last repose.

The boy had ceased to speak, There beside the youthful warrior, Tears fast coursed h.s swarthy check. Slow sank the sun behind the hills, The pale moon rose o'erhead,

And still the stranger knelt as when,

O'er the body of the dead. There pal and calm and beautifu', Forevermore at rest, Lay the youthful grey clad warrior, With his flag around his breast.

And threw her silver mantle,

[For the Beaufort Republican.] THE NAMELESS GRAVE.

MAE

Down in a dell, where the daisies Drink the glittering dew; There is a mound half hidden By violets, white and blue.

And who, so quietly slumbers Neath the sod in the grassy dell? Perhaps a fond mother's treasure Lieth here; O, who can tell?

No shaft of polished marble, Proclaims the sleeper's name; No date of birth, nor date of death; Nor aught of whence he came,

Who comes at evening twillight: With husbed, and sflont tread; To scatter summer flowers, O'er the quiet, sleeping dead?

Does a mother in her sorrow, Bow o'er this narrow had; White her tears, like gentle rain drops, Fall above his sleeping head? Perhaps another, who was dearer In the happy days long gone;

Comes, pale and sad, and trembling, To weep here, all alone. I can ne'er forget the feelings That were wrought upon in While my sympathetic whispers,

Were repeated by the wind. That mound in the flowery dell; Where the influential silenco Weaves a sad epchanting spell

Sings a soft, sweet funeral knell; But the name of the silent sleeper, No human tongue can tell.
