Kossuth and his Slaves.

Cincinnatti Commercial gives an ac at of an interview between Kossuth d the committe of arrangements for a eat meeting in Cincinnatti, which is en more than a fit supplement to his exncy's tete-a-tete with Capt. Long, of Mississippi. We feel a deep symthy for the committee in this case.aving charge of Kossuth as a guest, could do nor say no more than they id; and being men, freemen, their blood ust have been under thorough control, lse they could never have endured quietv to be thus treated like cowerly school oys before the dominie, or as slaves brought to account by harsh master.

The following is the account of the Commercial:

"An interview which took place on Wednesday evening, at the Burnet House, between Kossuth and the Hungarian committee, which had charge of the arrangements of the meeting at the depot, was a subject of general conversation round the city yesterday; and if the history related by those present be really true, a portion of that abundant sympathy manifested towards the 'Governor of Hungasy,' ought to be applied in immediate the laurels of auxiliary heroes, have brought upon them the sad deserts of unfruitful servants-and whose condition now, intiou. Well, they had an audience in the private apartment of the Governor, one of the main objects of the interview being to hand over to him the material aid colcollected for admission to the meetingsome 1,200. The first word's, it is said, were spoken by Kossuth: "You see, gendemen, your grand demonstration for the tered with pecaliar emphasis.

"A spokesman of the committee here attempted to offer an explanation in apology, alluding to the shortness of the notice given to the public, and the disappointment felt at postponing the day of important .- Charleston Courier. meeting as originally notified-his own indisposition suggesting the alteration,

"Kossuth .- O, too much committeeinefficient. [A chilling sensation was here observable.]

"Spokesman.-We really ourselves feel greatly mortified at the thinness of the assemblage, but—Kossuth.—Think of it, gentlemen! I had your assurance I should receive $10,-000 to-day, and I now find not twelve hundred people at your great meeting. "The committee then severally assured Kossuth their exertions had not been spared in endeavoring to collect a crowd. "Kossuth,-I humbly thank you, gen tlemen; but if I had been suffered to carry out my arrangements, I could have obtained as much material aid in fortycight hours as through your kindness I have received in fifteen days!

"The manner of Kossuth was all this time excited—the committee sat in silence and composed endurance, seeming to think that "anger has its priviledge," and

"Kossuth, in a style of remonstrance, then proceeded to say that he had been deceived-that upon the strength of the assurance given to him, he made contracts for the supply of several thousand dollars worth of cavalry harness-but his arrangements had been broken through by this ill-managed affair. 'Your large committees are inefficient. When in Europe,' aid he. 'I heard of a revolutionary mittee of one hundred and forty persons in Vienna, and I at once foresaw they would do nothing; gentlemen, you illus-trate the propriety of that conclusion.'— Brief intervals of clouded abstraction followed each of these pithy denunciations: but the momentary suspension of oral castignation was supplied by the withering l ok and excited gesture of Kossuth— "Aye, every joint should seem to curse and

And even now his burdened heart would brenk, Should he not curse them."

He also gave 'a broad hint' to the commitee that they had taken out $5,000 worth of Hungarian bonds which had not been accounted for. The committee handed over the sum which had been collected at the meeting, and shortly after retired, with 'their honors thick upon
