

A Southern Lady's first Impressions of New York.

[The following extracts from a private letter will be found interesting to our readers, as conveying a Southern lady's first impressions of the city of New York.]

IRVING HOUSE, New York, May 7, 1852.

I think it is Mr. Jefferson, who says that great cities are great exercises on the body politic. At least, I have heard this axiom attributed to him, and I suppose no other statesman would be more likely to utter this sentiment.—Some other less distinguished, but probably more piously inclined philosopher has said, that

"God made the County, And man made the Town."

And to my mind both declarations are true to their fullest extent. Let a citizen of the South—for example, of a Southern plantation, or a Southern village, or interior town, whose life has been spent in the South, whose traditions, associations, ideas, attachments and recollections are all of the "Sunny South"—let a Southern lady especially, thus wholly identified with the South, come and reside here for several months as your friend has done, and the wish to leave this boisterous Babylon, and to return homeward again, will become the fixed and ruling thought, notwithstanding the approach of the fashionable season, and the health, gaiety, and Southern society which will soon be attracting the beau monde to the Northern springs.

New York is a great caravan, a sort of San Francisco on a grand and permanent scale. It is not a Southern city nor a Northern city, it is hardly an American city.—It is a cosmopolitan city—a city of all nations living together, by common consent, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the State and the corporation, and protected by a body of nine hundred policemen. Walking along Broadway, and the multitudes of French, Irish, German, Italian and Jews from every nation under the sun, that throng the sidewalks, are calculated to excite your apprehensions of our political safety. And when you hear of from three to five thousand emigrants a day, and meet detachments of them daily upon the streets in all the roughness of semi-barbarism and European poverty, you cannot help feeling some alarm lest the capacity of our institutions to regenerate and assimilate these crude materials with our people, should be tested beyond their strength. And it is enough to make the heart bleed to see the numbers of distressed creatures, men, women and children, of all imaginable types and shades and combinations, that haunt, like ghostly spectres, the most conspicuous places of the principal street. They are the debris from over-populated Europe, resuming the old vocation under the better auspices of this new field of enterprise.

In a word, this crowded Babel of five hundred thousand people, of all nations, in which the American appears only as the leaving elements of the mass—in this thickly swarming where all individuality, all society, all fixed associations of home, and friends, and neighbors, and life itself, are swallowed up in a confusion of tongues, and in such a desperate scramble for money, as is seen in this crowded Babel is no place for such as you and I. With the opening summer it will be agreeable enough to leave the quites of the Southern country, and spend a few days in New York, shopping, and seeing the sights of the town and suburbs, and the amusements of the theatres, on the way to Saratoga or Niagara; but to come here, to reside here, and to attempt to identify yourself with New York, as a New Yorker, is a solitude more dreadful to contemplate than the solitude of the black veil. New York is a place to make money in, a charming place for a few days sojourn, a place for the splendor of these merchant princes, in these superb places of Union square, and Fifth avenue; and for the exercise of charity in the relief of endless destitution and wretchedness; a place abounding in good people and good institutions and swarming with crime and degradation; but it is no place for you and I. Madame de Stail was miserable out of Paris; but we can be happier out of New York. I see it stated in the newspapers that while the average population of London is seven people to each house, the average of New York is thirteen, and the pressure for room is so great that the rent of a cellar for a year, I am told is equal to the price of a nice little house in any of the interior towns of the South. But enough of all this. Let us turn to the brighter side of the picture.

Broadway—but for the dust when the sun shines, and for the mud when it rains, and but for the danger of the omnibuses, and the crowd of all nations, many of them smoking the most odious pipes and cigars but for these things—Broadway is still the paramount attraction to a stranger, in New York. We must do our shopping, and Broadway is the place of all places for that. Stewart's & Beck's for dry goods is proverbial; and when as it appears in the single article of gloves, the sales at Stewart's last year amounted to $400,000, you may form some idea of the amount of their sales of all other goods, wholesale and retail. Then there is Bullfinch's manilla emporium, and a variety of other stores, devoted to particular classes of goods; and at most of which there is a very fair margin left for a little jewelry. But competition is great and such is, it is said, the quantity of goods in the city of all kinds, and the desire of the merchants to sell off, that there was never a better opportunity for profitable purchases by wholesale. By retail, I know that good bargains can be made through the aid of an experienced New York lady as pilot.

But the jewel of all Broadway, is Genin's ladies' and juveniles' bazaar. It is the same Genin who immortalized himself, and made his fortune as a hatter, in the purchase of the first Jenny Lind ticket sold in the U. States, for which he paid $615—it is the same Genin whose donation of a thousand dollars to Kosuth, secured him the sale of several thousand dollars worth of Kosuth hats, Genin is scarcely second to Barnum as a genius in his line. This ladies' and juveniles' bazaar, is indeed, the crowning triumph of his taste and enterprise. It is one of the fine store rooms of the marble-fronted St. Nicholas hotel. It is fitted up in the light and bright, and graceful style of a fairy palace.

The goods consist of ladies' hats, shoes, slippers, gloves, parasols, riding whips, and so forth; and of juveniles' clothing for both sexes, from top to toe, of the most exquisite importations from London and Paris. These various articles are tastefully arranged in upright glass cases around the sides of the room, and at intervals over the floor and all around overhead little fancy hats and caps, and robes are hung like flowers upon the silver branches which seem to bud and blossom with these dainty articles. In the centre of the room is a crystal fountain—its several basins one above another, full of gold fish; and a little beyond is suspended a prodigious basket of artificial flowers natural as life, the flowers and the fountain being lighted by the many colored reflections from the fine dome of stained glass overhead. It is a fairy place; full of beautiful things, and the neat side rooms for the accommodation of the ladies and the little people in trying the fit of their purchases, makes it complete. Beautiful and costly as is the style in which this Bazaar is fitted up, I have priced the goods and with some friends of mine have bought several articles; and considering their superior style and finish, they are among the very cheapest articles of the kind in New York. Elegant unfripped bonnets may be had for four or five dollars. The best of all is that the ladies are attended by ladies, some of whom are from Paris. Among the many admirable things in New York, I believe few of our Southern lady friends will find anything more to their taste and fancy than Genin's Bazaar.

I would tell you something of the gallery of pictures of the Art Union, and the Academy of Design; and of musical and theatrical matters in this great emporium of commerce, fashion, and the fine arts, but my letter is already too long. The Southern guests at the Irving House are increasing in numbers, the dreadful winter is really gone, the terrible sufferings of May day in Gotham (the general moving day) are over, and New York is open to the world. Bit to me its whirl of excitements has become monotonous, its moving multitudes a moving chaos, and Broadway itself a solitude compared with the unpretending attractions of home and friends in the South.

Yours, very sincerely, and always,

CEDAR SPRING ASYLUM.—We were among those of our District who had the pleasure, on Friday last, of witnessing the very interesting exercises of this humane institution; creditable alike, to its founder and to the State. A large and respectable audience, were entertained for several hours, in contemplating a scene passing before them, well calculated to excite their admiration, and to call up the most tender emotions of the heart. More than thirty youths of both sexes, were extended in a line under an arbour erected on the front grounds, and answering on their boards, in a beautiful and rapid hand, the various questions propounded by the principals, Mr. N. P. Walker. Their orthography was remarkably correct, embracing lessons in geography, grammar and arithmetic; and accompanied with remarks on matters and things then passing before them. We were forcibly impressed with the calmness, innocence and grateful expression of their features. The girls and young ladies, were neatly and uniformly dressed in white; and would compare well in beauty, propriety, and intelligence, with those whose sympathies had called them to the spot. The boys and young men were exceeding in polite and graceful—as well in their attention to their classmates, as in their manner of responding and communicating with their teachers and their friends. We were less surprised than we were pleased, with the great improvement made in the last twelve months. The buildings also, of this institution have been greatly improved and fitted up in a manner which proves that Mr. Walker has been no less industrious and attentive to the comforts of his large household, than has been successful in imparting to them that knowledge which will make them useful, and cheer the solitude and brighten the hopes of his silent and helpless inmates.—Spartan.

HAY MAKING.—The hay making season is on us with all its enjoyments, actual and reminiscent! With how many happy boyish recollections is the meadow associated! Moral: every man should have a meadow. It is the scene of childhood's dearest sports, the source of pleasant reminiscence to age; it enhances the beauty of every landscape, adds to the value of every farm, and is the source of more pleasure and profit—is more useful and more ornamental than the same amount of land devoted to any other purpose. How beautiful in the summer is the country set with such emerald gems; how important to all seasons, is the yield of these verdant patches! Lastly, meadows are healthy, and if every pond and marsh was, as it easily can be, converted into one, miasma would not be one of our chief atmospheric luxuries.—Raleigh Post.

ELOQUENCE, EXTRAORDINARY.—A few days ago we had something of an unusual occurrence. A man who passes by the name of J. J. Russell, came to this place with a woman whom he claimed as his wife, obtained boarding and lodging in a respectable house, and remaining in comfortable quarters for two days, left for Augusta to return in a short time. On the day after he left, there came another man in search, found and claimed her as his wife, threatened vengeance on her and Russell, and carried her off on the next train. Nothing more was heard of them until yesterday, when Russell and the same woman returned to this place by the Passenger's train, they are here now. It is said that she has been divorced from the man who claimed her as his wife—with how much truth we know not.—Palmetto Sentinel.

A COTTON FACTORY IN ARKANSAS.—A cotton factory has just been put in operation at Van Buren, Arkansas, under the superintendence of Mr. William Bradley. It is capable of turning out thousand spindles, though only a few are now used. The newspapers speak of the experiment with much favor.

From the Dus West Telescope. Negroes on a Rice Plantation.

Many a good, honest Yankee, and Western man too, would be filled with holy horror, at the mere recital of our caption: "Negroes on a Rice Plantation." They have seen so many caricatures, and heard so many exaggerated and false statements, in regard to slavery in the South, and particularly in reference to the condition of things on a rice or sugar plantation, that at the mention of the thing, the mind recoils, and the heart sickens. The agonies of Hades, are scarcely more intense, than the torments of a rice plantation, as pictured in an Abolition Almanac, or as described in Abolition papers. That any one should be so base; as to lose all sense of honor, and of truth, as to publish such caricatures knowing them to be such is strange indeed. And that any one should make such statements in regard to the treatment of negroes in the South, as we often see made in the Northern papers, without a knowledge from observation, of the actual fact in the case, is scarcely less strange. "Offences must come, but woe unto them by whom they come."

But we rejoice to know that all Northern men, are not abolitionists, and especially do we rejoice to know that all Northern Editors are not fools and madmen, on the subject of slavery, but that occasionally one is found who has sense enough to see the truth, and candor enough to confess it.

Dr. Leyburn, one of the Editors of the Presbyterian, (Philadelphia,) in coming to the meeting of the General Assembly in Charleston, came by way of Savannah, Ga. While there he visited some of the more interesting localities in the surrounding country. In a letter in his paper, he says:

"Returning from Bonaventure with impressions not soon to pass away, our friends drove us into the settlement or plantation-building, on one side of the rice plantations. In these the overseers and negroes reside. In this case, there was quite a village—and a sweet romantic one too. It was on an elevated plateau, overlooking the bright, green rice fields below, under the deep shade of a grove of live-oaks, with the undergrowth all cleaned out, and the straight tree-trunks whitewashed for some ten or fifteen feet from the ground—the neat white cottages, arranged about forty or fifty feet apart, on either side of a wide rural street. One of the buildings—a long one with piazzas the whole length on both sides—was a hospital for the sick; and another, something like it, a nursery for the children. Groups of the slaves were standing about some of the doors, and numbers of boys were shooting marbles, and making the sylvan arches ring with the sounds of their joyous sports. This, too, was not too far a journey from the rice-plantation slave life, and I could but wish that the unwashed, unshod, unwarmed, unclothed, uncared-for thousands in the cellars, garrets, and allies of our great cities were one tenth part as well off."

DEMOCRATIC PAPER IN CHARLOTTE.—We are requested to state that arrangements have been made to publish a Democratic paper in Charlotte, commencing about the first of July next. The Editorial Chair will be filled by Robert P. Waring, Esq., of Charlotte, and Mr. William Hunter of the same place will act as Foreman in the office. We wish the enterprise much pecuniary success, and, from our knowledge of the character of Mr. Waring as a high-toned gentleman and scholar of varied attainments, we have no doubt, not only that his paper will be ably conducted as a party journal, but that it will be conducted upon those high principles of honor, and true courtesy, that will ensure a reciprocity of the same spirit on our part, whenever we come in conflict upon the principles of the two great parties of the country, which we will respectively represent. The Prospectus of Mr. Waring's paper will appear in our next.—Charlotte Whig.

COAL IN LINCOLN.—The Messrs. Detters, operating on the land of Mr. Sherrill, about two miles from town, have made the gratifying discovery of a bed of stone coal. They have now sunk their shaft to the depth of about twenty feet. They have certainly found coal; but how much labor they will yet have to undergo before they came upon the main strata, is yet to be determined.—Lincoln Republican.

There is said to be an unusual scarcity of horses in Indiana and Kentucky, and in many instances these animals command as high as $150 per head.

The following rules will be observed in their future distribution:

- 1. That medals be awarded to all officers and men who were honorably discharged.
- 2. That when an officer resigned and another was appointed in his place, medals be awarded to both.
- 3. That when a man was discharged and a substitute received in his place, medals be given to both.
- 4. All the above rules to be subject to exceptions, where, in particular cases, circumstances existed which should justly deprive the officer or soldier of the honor.
- 5. That in the case of those officers and soldiers who have died, medals be given to the nearest relatives.

In accordance to these rules, all members of the Regiment who have not received medals, and the nearest relative of those who have fallen in battle, or who have died, will send in their names, written at large and legibly, to the Messrs. Gregg, Hayden, & Co., Charleston, who are prepared to have them cast, and their names engraved.

The muster rolls of the regiment are deposited in this department; but it is thought the adoption of the mode recommended will facilitate the end desired, which will be compared with the muster rolls to test their correctness.
