so destructive. Between the two grindstones of Whig and Democratic Free-Soilism, the South may be crushed if her sons do not hold that great vital question paramount to party triumphs or obligations, and denonnce the cloven foot whenever it displays itself. The Ides of June are come; but they are not yet over.

Congress, which has been in a state of suspended animation during the last three weeks, rubbed its eyes, yawned and woke up to day. Still the seats in the Senate were rather empty, and so were the pro-ceedings. In the House there was greater bustle, but no great deal of business transacted. The Presidential election absorbs all other considerations. The nominations were received rather coldly here, but last night there was a very large and a very noisy torchlight procession, which was addressed by Gen. Scott. The President was also honored with a congratu-latory visit by the same judicious individuals, and was very happy of course to see them and join in their congratulations over his own defeat. It is supposed that Webster will withdraw from the Cabinet .---Speculation is at fault as regards Mr. Graham's movements. He is a gentleman of whom nothing disadvantageous can be truly said, as far as general reputation goes, though certainly not a first rate man.

The result of the two last nominations for the Presidency, has placed in strong relief the practical peculiarities of our political system. The theory of the Ameri-constitution assuredly is, that talent and civil services should prevail in the highest Executive office, for the dignity of commander-in-Chief is only nominal. I was never in the contemplation of the framers of that instrument, that the test for this eminent station should come to be military and not civil ability and service. We had, it is true, been conducted through the revolution by a millitary commander, who was elected to the Presidency by the agency, in a great degree, of those who assisted in forming the constitution and putting the government into operation, yet the elevation of Washington was as much for tried judgement in civil affairs as his mil-immediate successors, were exclusively civ-ilians. The elder and younger Adams, Madison and Monroe, never acted in a military capacity, with the exception of the latter, and he never held a higher than a Colonelcy in the revolution.

It was the second war and the battle of New Orleans that broke this line of civil precedents. It was the eminent military services of General Jackson united to his popularity, that gave undue prominence to the military over the civil qualities, in the popular choice. It was the Mexican war that strengthened this popular preference of the untested soldier to the tried statesman. Generals Harrison, Taylor and Scott, have been successively chosen by whigConventions, whilst civilians have been nominated by three successive democratic nominated by three successive democratic Conventions, in the persons of Mr. Van Bu-ren, Mr. Polk, and Mr. Pierce for the latter is not eminently a soldier. In two of the elections which followed, military men of eminence were chosen, Generals Harrison and Taylor M. Polk, trimmet be the solution of the Islands of Edisto, Wadmalaw and the balance of Correspondence consisting of three; a Committee of Correspondence consisting of three; a Committee of Correspondence and Accounts of three; a Committee to procure Membership and subscriptions of nine—three of which to be taken from each of the Islands of Edisto, and Taylor. Mr. Polk triumphed over Gen. Cass, but Gen. Cass' distinction as a soldier is only titular. If General Scott should be elected, it would be entirely at tributable to his merits and services as a commander.

The solution of this phenomenon is found of course in the popular inclination, as these military personages, untried in civil affairs, would not have been selected as candidates unless they had been pop-ularly available. But what complicates next: the question, when we proceed a step further, is that the foreign element in our population has as much to do, if not more, in producing the result than the domestic. Among the masses of Germans in Pennsylvaina, and, we believe, in some other States, it is understood that no candidate for the Presidency will receive solarg a number of suffrages as he who is invested with a military presting. Now, if this feeling is shared by other portions of our foreign population, how is it that this inclination for military Presidents is associated in the explanation of this fact, with the lust of conquest and the popularity of military leaders, attributed to the American character ? How does the foreign ele nent combine so readily with the native in giving predominence to military over civic services ! Mr. Webster who has grown grey in the public service-whose talents are pre-eminent-whose experience is undisputedreceived in the late convention twentyeight and twenty-nine votes, and the contest, in reality, was between the individual who was in possession, and one whose public life had been almost exclusively military. How is it that our military chieftains so uniformily mount on the shoulders of our most distinguished and tried civlians !- Southern Standard.

GOLD IN ABBEVILE .--- It would really eem that Abbeville District is destined become a point of attraction for the goldliggers, as well as California and Australia. The success of Mr. Dorn, the owner of the much-talked of mine located in that District within one mile of the Edgefield line, is indeed wonderful. His income from the working of eight hands is about fifteen hundred dollars a day. This amount is obtained from fifteen bushels of dirt, or ore, which is pulverized by a mill of two horse power. There is also an extensive manganese mine on Mr. Dorn's land. This manganese mine on Mr. Dorn's land. This mineral is used extensively in manufacturing chlorine for the purpose of bleaching glazing pottery, and clarifying glass. These mines are estimated to be worth one mil-
