Teancastr Aedaer,

DEVOTED TO LITERARY, COMMERCIAL, AGRICULTURAL, GENERAL AND LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

VOLUME I.

LANCASTER, C. H., SOUTH CAROLINA, WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 13, 1852.

LANCASTER LEDGER IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY MORNING.

THE

R. S. BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TERMS:

Two Dollars per year, if paid in advance; Two Dollars and Fifty Cents, if paid in six months; or Three Dollars, if payment is delayed until the end of the year. These terms will be rigidly adhered to.

Advertisements will be conspicuously inserted at seventy-five cents per square of -twelve lines, for the first insertion, and thirty-seven and a half cents for each subsequent insertion. A single insertion One Dollar. Nothing will be counted less than a square.

Advertisers are requested to state, in writing on their advertisements, the number of times they wish them inserted; or they will be continued in the paper until birth-day. ordered out, and charged accordingly.

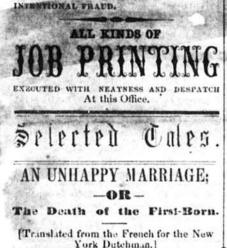

The Law of Newspapers.

1, All subscribers who do not give express Notice to the contrary, are consid-ered as wishing to continue their subcrip-"But who we tions.

2. If subscribers order the discoutinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them until arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse taking their papers from the offices to which they are sent, they are held responsible till their bills are settled, and their papers ordered to be discontinued.

4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a newspaper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of INTENTIONAL TRAUD.

ieties, had no suspicion of her husband's threshold of the anti chamber, when he sufferings. Accustomed as she was to heard the sound of a carriage driving take no part in his affairs, she looked up- at full speed into the court yard. He apon political interests as altogether beyond proached the window. A post chaise the sphere of a woman, and never sought stopped at the door, and a nan sprang to afford him any consolation under troubnastily out of it. Maurice uttered an exles which she was powerless to avert, clamation of surprise, as he recognized M. which she did not understand, and of the Dupont, of Bergues. importance of which she was cousequently There must of necessity be some mighunaware. Meanwhile an anniversary rety reason for M. Dapont's appeasance, for curred, which hitherto, whatever might the worthy man was not like to underhave been his political engagements, M. take an expensive journey, which broke Fraussen had not failed to celebrate, namethrough all his habits, and removed him ly, his wife's birthday. for a time from the provincial town which Early in the morning a present was he inhabited, and never willingly quitted brought to her consisting of a bouquet of without sufficient cause. The minister white Camelias, which were her favorite was endeavoring to divine what could be have been conceived.

The

nesliately for Bergues,"

The notary established himself in an rin chair and M. Fraussen went to seek eradie of the child, and gazing at him with flowers, together with a picture in a richly the object of the old man's visit, when the furnished ebony frame, and admirably exlatter burst into his study with all the eaecuted, representing the Flemish chattau. gerness of youth. which was the birth-place of Madame "Your excellency must return with me immediately to Bergues," exclaimed he Fraussen. Bertha recollected having one evening expressed a desire to possess a sketch of the even an hour's delay, we risk the loss of spot connected with all the recollections of verythin c." her childhood, and much touched by his attention to her wishes, she hastened to "Of your election ! " replied the notary, whose reply was a thender-clap to the her husband's study to thank him warm-minister. from him. He even acknowledged that he had forgotten that it was his wife's hat there could be a doubt on the sub-The confession chilled Bertha's heart, and destroyed the pleasure caused by the mysterious present. From whom, then, could it come ? Who could have remembered her wish, and gratified her with so " But who was present when I spoke of my old Chateau ? There was M. De Vandreuil, M. Fraussen, the Prince George and vourself. Could it be you, Marceline ?' asked she, in the evening of her friend. Madame de Mathiason acknowledged ed in a tone of contempt. that the bouquet and the picture came from her.

Bertha male no answer, and during the of considerable influence.' rest of the evening she appeared thought-ful and sad. This proof of affection had ed t e room. sunk deep into her heart, wounded by the neglect of Maurice. She could not free herher, sir," said she. self from these painful thoughts, and the the kindness of Madame de Mathiæson, and the indifference of her husband. man ? When she rose the next morning, how-" M. Gabriel Rasconnetz."

ever, these ideas were but too quickly dispelled. Her son appeared to be unwell. She hoped, and so did the Doctor, that aid the maid once more. was a mere trifle, which rest and a careful diet would easily set to rights .--ary; "I am going to my wife who is in

But her hopes were disappointed ; far from diminishing, the ailment assumed a more serious character, and the poor mother recognized, or funcied she did so, some of the symptoms of the illness with which her little Maurice had been attacked with a few months previously. She imparted her fears to the Doctor who did not share them, and to her husband who paid litthe heed to them. They were both accustomed to her imaginary fears on her son's ties and dangers of his position, when Ber-consternation. A gluace sufficed to reveal account, and looked upon her gloomy forto Maurico the full extent of the peril. bodings as the result of exagerated as xiety. "The distant or damen I with I im ala Bertha, re-assured by their arguments and es of dismay. by their security, endeavored to lay aside " The industary symptoms are assuming a very serious character," said one. "The breathing is becoming difficult." added the other. " The fever has increased." " Ile is delirions," a woman's fears. The symptoms, which Maurice hid his finzer on the child's pulse and counted its throbbings. There was no hope now. Science and skill were bending over him could scarcely datast at agination, appeared to her to be obvious alike powerless to arrest the progress of intervals, an almost imperceptible breath Two days later, M. Fraussen and the the disease. He endeavored to conceal upon her cheek, which proved to his anguish, for Bertha, her eyes fixed the strugglee was not yet over. Doctor could no longer deny the illness of upon his face, seemed endeavoring to read his innermost thoughts. " You will yet be able to cure him ?"ried she, in a tone of agony. "You have had then proved efficacious should be again an pense. By the mercy of God, howev-er, the disease took a favorable turn, and fittle Maurice recovered rapidly. already saved him once, M turice; he will owe you his I fe this time also, will be one morning he stretched out his arms to not !

"Maurice ! Maurice ! stay ! I will not et you go till you havesworn to me upon your honor not to abandon my son. For the sake of your child have pity upon mel" M. Dupont glided behind the minister. "Time presses," whispered he; "every Maurice pressed his lips to the forehead of his wife "I shall soon come back," said he.

The notary made his escape, She rose and placed herself in front the door.

" You shall not go," said she, " or if ou do, you must first trample under foot a despairing woman, the mothe of your dving child. She has no hope but in you; and would you forsake your son !"

"I have no need of any one to teach me my duty," said M. Fraussen, harshly, for he was disgusted at his own meanness without further preamble. "By a day, or and being angry with himself, sought, as is too often the case, to find cause of anger with another, in order to escape from the

"Of everything ! of what do you mean ?" reproaches of his own conscience. "If I acknowledged the necessity of remaining with the child, do you suppose it would be needful for you to urge it upon me? My Hitherto, whatever might have been his assistance is useless here; urgent calls litical anxieties, he had never dreamed summon me elsewhere, and I obey them." "You shall not go!" cried Bertha, scarce knowing what she said, and clinging to jeet of his election. He looked upon it as certain that his native town of Bergnes, her husband. proud of being represented by a man of He sought to put her aside. uch distinction, and above all, by a min-"No ! no stay! stay?"

ister, would re-elect him without opposi-He disengaged himself from her hold, not without some violence, thrust her aside, tion. The tidings imparted to him by the notary mortified him deeply. Not that closed the door behind, hastened to rejoin he feared a defeat, but he was angry that the notary, to take his place beside him the idea of bringing forward another candidate in opposition to him should ever tillion to drive on as fast as his horses could gallop. "Oh, sir stop ! my mistreess has fainted " And who is my opponent ? " he asktway," cried the voice of the terrified maid form the window of Bertha's room. But "A formidable one, for he is nn inhabithe sound of her voice was drowned by tant of the place, wealthy, and possessed the rattleof the wheels; the minister did not hear it and M. Dupont, who did, took At this moment the maid again entercare to say nothing on the subject to his " My mistress entreats you to come to companion.

When Bertha saw her husband forsake " I am coming," replied he. Then turnher and his child, when he thrust her so ing impatiently to Dupont, he enquired, unfeelingly asi le in order to follow Du pont, and sacrifice his duty to his family to the calls of ambition, she went and rnd who is this wealthy and influential resumed her place in silence, by the cra-dle of her son. She felt and understood " Sir, my mistress is in the greatest disfrom that moment that it was all over with ress, and again entreats you to come," the poor little child, and that she mu " My son is id," said Maurice in the no-the poor little child, and that she must ay aside every shadow of hope. The comtenances of the physicians, during great alarm; when I have reassured her. I will return to you, and we will set out imvisita which they paid every half hear' in the little sufferer, confirmed her in this terrible conviction. Bertha no longer questioned them, no longer implored them to save her child. With feelings of anguish, which words are inadequate to its wife. He found her bending over the describe, she waited there in silence. How countenance of despair. The two Doefearful for a mother thus to await the tors who attended the child were standing death of her child! Her eyes fixes upon beside her, with looks of perplexity and the countenance once so bright and er attepted to afford relief,-all was useles

now-they gazed with compassion upon the mournful scene, and withdrew without and fainter, until at length complete siupon her cheek, which proved to her that uttering a word.

drawn.

"A curse upon him!" exclaimed M. de Matthiasen whose wife strove to silence, him by placing her hand upon his lips. "Suffer your husband to speak," cried Bertha; "he but express my own feelings," continued she, laying her hand upon the head of her child. "Standing by the corps. of my son, I implore the vengeance of God upon his crime-it cannot remain unpunhed. If the law cannot reach it, eternai justice has its judgments, and the world its scorn for the infanticide. For myself, "I will never again behold the murderer of my boy."

"For God's sake do not listen to the ounsels of your despair," pleaded M. de Matthiæse.n

She replied by a smile-by such a mile

"I have no child now-I have no husband-I am alone in the world!" Marceline lighted a taper and placed it eside the little bed. M. de Matthiasen placed a golden crucifix on the breast of the child. Then all three knelt around it, and thus the night wore away. At break of day Bertha rose from her knees and went to the window, which she opened. The fresh morninig air, laden with the sweet odors of spring, entered the chamber of death, and a little bird began to sing cheerily. Bertha drew the cradle close to the window and fixed a gaze of painful intensity upon her child. He seemed to be sleeping sweetly. She fetched his prettiest clothes and began to deck him with them. Marceline gathered some flowers in the conservatory, and returned with a crown of white roses, which she placed on the head of the litin the west-chaise, and to call to the pos- tle corpse, whose angel spirit had been recalled to heaven.

M. de Matthiæsen brought from the adjoining room an ebony coffin, lined with white satin. Bertha looked at him with a bewildered expression, but not a tear moistened her burning evelids. She laid the child in the coffin and strewed around him the flowers which Marceline had brought together with the crown. Then she chose from amongst his playthings those that had been his favorites, and laid them at his feet. This done, she sat down beside the coffin and remained in a kird of stupor until the approaching footstepof the priest were heard in the courtyard and entrance-hall. She shuddered, rose, and stretched out her arms towards the coffin, while she strove to utter some words which her white lips seemed unable to frame. God at length took pity upon her, and she sank structers on the floor. While Maleme de Matthia sen came to her assistance her husband placed lace viel over the child's remain 18, closed the lid of the coffin, screwed it down, and, taking it in his arms, delivered it to the priest.

When he returned Mulame Fraussen was beginning to recover; she looked with for my hand ; my parents left me free to astonishment upon those around her, and choose, and Effle, dear, are we not happy? joy ous to watch the gradual extinction of life. Poor little felow his lips were parch-of her son. Then she recollected the touth, see Adolph again to appeared to have forgotten everything until her gaze rested upon the emety cradle sorrowfully in her face) " did you never

" Effie, dear, sit down with me on this old garden seat; give up your walk for this morning ; I slept but indifferently last night, and morning finds me languid and A shadow passed over Effle's face, the little cherry lips pouted, and a rebelious feeling was at her heart, but one look at her mother's pale face decided her, and untying the strings of her hat, she leaned her head caressingly upon her mother's shoulder. "You are ill, dear mother, you are troubled ;" and she looked enquiringly up into ber face. " Listen to me, Effic, I have a story to tell you of myself. When I was about your age I formed an acquaintance with a coung man by the name of Adolph. He had been but a short time in the village, but long enough to win the hearts of half the young girls from their rustic admirers. Handsome, frank and social, he found him-self everywhere a favorite. He would sit by me hours, reading our favorite authors ind side by side we rambled through all the lovely paths in which our village abounded. My parents knew nothing to hisdisalvantage, and were equally charmed as myself with his cultivated refinement of manner, and the indefinable charm with which he invested every topic, grave or gay, which it suited his mood to discuss. Before I knew it, my heart was no longer in my own keeping. One afternoon he called to accompany me upon a little excursion we had planned together. As he came up the gravel walk I noticed his fine hair was in disorder, but a pang keen as death, shot through my heart, when he approached me with reeling unsteady step, and stammering tongue. I could not speak; but the chill of death gathered round my heart, and I fainted. When I recovered, he was gone, and my mother's lace was bending over me, moist with tears, Her woman's heart knew what was pass ing in mine. She pressed her lips to my forchead and only said, " God strengthen you to choose the right, my child," I could not look upon her sorrowful eyes the pleading face of my gray-haired father, and trust myself again to the witchery of that voice and smile, A letter came to me; I dared not read it. Alas ! my heart pleaded too eloquently even then, for his return. I returned it unopened ; my father and mother devoted themselves to lighten the load that lay upon my heart, but the perfume of a flower, a remembered strain of music, a struggling moonbeam, would bring back old memories with a crushing bitterness that swopt all before it for the moment. But my father's aged hand lingered on my head with a blessing, and my mother's voice had the sweetness of an angel's, as it fell upon my Time passed on, and 1 conquered myself. Your father saw me, and proposed " Oh, mother," said Effic, (then looking

NUMBER 36.

Sunday Reading.

From the Olive Branch. Mother, Home and Heaven.

WHAT names are there on earth more musical than these three ? What can be sweeter than that of mother? How many associations cluster around the heart at the mention of that word ? Even hardhearted warriors have been seen to weep on hearing it casually spoken. All the joys, sorrows and perplexities of our earlier years are connected with her. We can hardly recall an event of our childhood, but which brings with it either her reproving glance or an encouraging smile. Nothing gave us more pain when we had done some rash thoughtless deed, than the sight of her sad look. Many reproofs or lectures might have hardened our hearts, whereas her troubled look spoke volumes, and made a lasting impression. Then we resolved to do nothing to displease her .---Perfectly happy were we, when after performing some act of self-donial, we met her fond approving smile. And in later years, when we are in doubt, to whom do we go for counsel, but to our mother !---For we feel that she never will advise us wrongly, and if we follow her counsels, it will be hardly possible to err. In joy ever ready to sympathise. In sorrow to comfort and console us. How strong and enduring is the love of a mother! heart is ready to break as she sees her child torn from her by the " grim monster, Death," and b rne to the tomb. Her anguish cannot be described. Then the world seems dark and dreazy to her, and she feels that she has nothing left to live

A son may be attacked by some contaious disease; his friends have all forsaken him but one; she, all forgetful of self, stands ever near his couch, to administer the cooling draught, and bathe the heated brow. Fearless and undaunted, she is willing to face death ! if by so doing he be spared to her. Who would do this but a mother? He may become degraded and scorned by the world, and he would be left alone, the most wretched being in the universe, but for one to whom he can fly; she is ever ready to receive him. No sacrifice is too great, if it would win him back to the paths of virtue, and cause him to become a man.

What a blessing, then, is a good mother ! How much we owe to her ? - Every passion that we have subdued, every virtue we may possess, we must attribute to her watchfulness and care. Think you we can repay her ? It is a debt that were we to live a hundred years, we could nev er cancel.

In the formation of our character, whether good or evil, outward circumstances exert a painful influence. In early childhood, the mind is more susceptible than when more advanced in years. Therefore, the first impressions the mind receives, indelably remain. An aged person remem-bers every act of his childhood, but the occurrences of yesterday passed from his mind as soon as they happened. We form in youth, in a great measure our characters; in the bosom of home, and with kind parents to guide our unwary steps. Although a son may rove far from his native land, yet he will never forget the light of home. The rememberance of the loved ones there will streng hen him to resist the voice of the syren. When temptations assail him, a voice soft and sweet. like his mother's, sounds in his ears. Her fond imploring glance rises before him, and he banishes the evil thought from his heart. He thinks of heme, recalls his father, mother, brothers and sisters, and their many acts of kindness for him, and he breathes a vow that he will never do aught to grieve them. When one of the family circle returns after a long absence, how joyously he is greeted. Then home seems dearer than ever to him. How pleasant are family gatherings! Let us imagine for a moment one of those merry meetings of "kindred." The fun loving Harry never ceases to joke the quiet and dignified Herbert. who has come from the city, upon the size of his collar, the cut of his coat, or his patent leather graithers. H rry wears his collar a la Byron, and never spends a thought upon dress. Herbert cannot say a word in defence of himself, while Harry, having the field entirely to himself, improves it, much to the amusement of the thers. All seem to partake of the universal joy, from the hoary headed grandfather, down to the little fellow with flaxen ringlets, the pet of all. If there is a paradise to be found on earth, 'tis in a ome where all unite to promote other's happiness. Would we look further for loved money, immediately asked what pleasures, when such pure enjoyments can found in our homes! And in these our earthly homes, we must be fitting ourselves to enjoy heaven, our final home. We are but children placed here in a school for our culture and improvement. The trials and disappointments of life tend to discipline the heart. and bring us nearer to God. We are apt to repine at the dispensations of Providence, when by them we are made to mourn. Yet I think if we could but re-"Tis well," replied the lawyer, "I had a alize the end God has in view, we should reason for as' ing." The next time he saw the girl's father, he the sufferings we have here, were never intended for us by God. But in my opin-"I have inquired about this man's cir- ion, the heart of man would be more sincumstances. He has, indeed, no ready ful and corrupt than it now is, if there were money, but he has a jewel, for which, to nothing to try him. Take as an instance money, but he has a lewel, for which, to my knowledge, he has been offered and refused twenty thousand dollars." This induced the old father to consent Stay is hand is lightly laid upon her to the marrage, which accordingly took fied, nothing has thwarted any desire,and the pleading voice of a mother place; though it is said in the sequel he rest that springing often shook his head when he thought of passions. No one is happy in his presence, and he is not so him

MADAME BERTHE FATHERMICK, believel that in marrying Doctor Maurice Franssen, her fears ; but this she found to be impos our Minister of State, the had united her- sible. It was in vain that she repeated to self to a man who sincerely loved her. It he self that the opmion of the celebrated was not long, however, before she discov-ered that his attention had been chiefly di-band, must have more foundation than rected to the large fortune of the wealthy woman whose hand he had obtained. She were declared to exist only in her own imfelt this disappointment keenly, but a source of consolation was ere long opened and incontrovertible. to her, and in her devotion to her first-born sou, she forgot the neglect and indifference of her husband. The love of the the child. They were alarmed, but they young mother was still further augmented did not despair. Once before, Maurice by a new and painful trial. The child was had saved his boy from a similar danger seized with alarming illness, and for neur- and he desired that the same means which ly a month she endured all the tortures of

The joy of Madame Fraussen, on see his mother, and for the first timesian a her son restored to her, was so great that whole week, raised his heavy head from it seemed to leave no room in her heart. the pillow.

for any feeling unconnected with him .-While his anxiety on his child's account eld in the past only the fearful reection of his danger; in the present, fairs were assuming a more and more re delight of seeing him strong and roalarming aspect. ust ; in the future, the fear lest his health been desolved, and the elections were to bould again fail. Bertha's whole life was passed in watchfulness over his physical tation was great throughout the whole welfare, or in ter, r if she perceived in him country : the different political parties had assumed an attitude of hostile opposition the slighteat symptoms of indisposition .---Compared with the cause of her present and nothing was heard of but pamphlets, solicitude, the greatest sorrow of her past plots and counterplots, attacks and recrimlife appeared to her but as trifles altogethinations. Being now reassured concerner unworthy of interest. So long as she ing the state of his son, M. Fraussen rewas under no apprehension for her little turned to the direction of affairs, resolved, Maurice she was content. If she went as became the leader of a party, that if he out it was on his account; if she came fell is should be at the head of his followhome it was still for him. It was the one ers. One morning, after a sleepless night, he ingrossing principle of her life, and renal her completely indifferent to all bewas gloomily reflecting upon the difficultha's maid entered his room. While his wife, her whole heart thus filled up and by an absorbing passion, was happier than she had ever been before, M. "My mistress is very unwell, sir," said she, "and I thought it was my duty to Franssen was tortured by political anxie-ty, and engaged in what appeared to be inform you of it. She sat up all last night with her child, and is very anxions and losing struggle against powerful adverunhappy about him. Yesterday she sent me five or six times in the course of the Murice beheld the decline of his pow day, to see if you were come in, and beg with feelings of auguish almost as bityou to come to her. She has now fallen ter as those which Bertha had watched by he sick bed of her son. His days were passed in disappointment, defeat and morasleep from futigue, and I thought it best to let you know, sir, in case you might please to take advantage of this opportuintion, his nights were sleepless. Ha nity to see the child without alarming my sine gloomy and morose, and his charmistress, for the poor little thing appears to equired a hurshness hitherto foreign His subor linates approached him be very ill."

"You were quite right, and I am much obliged to you, Eanny," replied Murice : "I will come to my wife's room directly. Is the child awake." ar and trembling, and quitted him ala with irris He appeared to have lost all his former self command, and on the slightest oppo-

"He seems very much exhausted, sir, but he has not slept these two days. His sition, would give way to the most undig nified eblutions of temper, while the fevers eyes are never shut, and he keeps up a of his mind produced an uncontrollable perpetual low moaning."

This mind produced an uncontrollable perpetual low moaning." stlessness. Bertha, absorbed in her maternal anx-Bertha, absorbed in h clasped his knees

"He does not need my care;" said he, with embarrassment. "These gentlemen," he added, turning to the Doctors, " will continue the treatment which they have detained M. Frussen from his post, his af- pursued so skillfully."

She turned upon hi u a look of astonishnent and dismay. " You will not leave our child, you will tot leave me, Maurice ? If you go away it seems as if you would take "ith you my boy's life. When you are here, I can feel ealm and hopeful, but in your absence I can feel nothing but terror."

"That is mere superstition," said he, enleavoring to force a smile.

" No matter, do not leave me, Maurice : ou have saved him once, and I feel that the same happiness is reserved for you this time also.

Maurice hesitated, not knowing what to lo, when M. Dupont's powdered head and en countenance appeared at the door .--He made a sign to M. Fraussen to lose no time. "You will stay, will you not? Oh, thanks, thanks. If you knew what I suffer alone here, without any one to comfort me, watching my child, perha s, on his deathed! Maurice, your presence gives me strength."

"He gently disengaged his hand which she had clasped within her own. M. Dupont redoubled his signals.

"An affair of the utmost importance compels me to leave you. My absence will not be long. Nothing but a positive duty-"Oh, Maurice ! do not leave me !

any duty be more positive than that of remaining with your wife, and with your child, at such a moment ? To leave us now would be to kill us both." M. Dupont impatiently drew out his watch. M. Franssen made a movement towards in. Bertha fell at her husband's feet, and heart sank within her, and she again features were stiffening beneath the cold fainted away. grasp of death. The physician no long-

After three days M. Frausser: returned All his ambitions hopes had been defeated, "My wife! my child !where are they?" sked he anxiously.

"God has had merey upon her," replied The child's breathing became fainter Madame de Matthiæsen, who was kneel ing in tears beside Bertha's bed; 'He has bending over him could scarcely detect, at

It is said that in the asylum at Charenon is a minial, who believes himself to be prime minister, and who is constantly

At length she felt nothing more. She sank down upon her knees, clasping her He tells his name to no one. hands in almost delirious agony.

When she was raised from the ground. a covering had been drawn over the corpse, and two persons were kneeling and praying beside her. They were Madame de Matthiæsen and her husband. She exchanged a rapid glance with them, and then turning to the cradle, raised the veil which concealed the corpse and stood mournfully contemplating it in a silence unbroken by her friends, the only witnesses of this painful scene, from which the servants had respectfully with-

Suddenly she appeared to awake as if rom a paidful dream. "He is now dead! surely he is not dead?"

she murmured. "I must be sleeping,tormented by a fearful dream. My child! my son! surely God cannot have taken him from me. He would not take a child from his mother !"

She took the little corpse in her arms, laid it on her lap, and began rocking it gently. The child's limbs were already stiffening, and its extremities had become icy cold.

"He does not move", cried she; "he is cold! he is dead! he is dead!"

M. de Matthiæsen and his wife endeavred to take from her the remains, and to remove her away from a sight so painful-But she resisted all their efforts, and re sumed :

"He is dead ! and his father might have saved him, as he had already done once before. He is dead! and it was his father who trampled him under foot: he forsook him without hesitation. His power, his position, or I know not what was at stake!

and what matterd it if the child died ? What are a mother and a child when compared to interests of such magnitude? What is a despairing woman, who, on her thrust rulely aside and he departs. He leaves her alone to watch the death-agony of her child, and it dies ! Look here! look here, and belokd the work of a hushand and a father A corpse lap of his mother!" the Har Park an fie, that was Adolph !"

reunited the mother to her child."

erving aloud for his wife and child

From the Olive Branch.

Love and Duty.

The Moon looked down on no fairer ight than Effie May as she lay sleeping on her little couch that fair summer night: so thought her mother as she gently glided in to give her a sileat good night blessing. The bright flush of youth, health and hope was on her cheek, the long dark hair lay unbound in masses about her neck and shoulders ; now a smile plays upon the red lips, and the mother bends ow to catch the indistinct murmer. She starts at the whispered name as if a serpent had stung her; and as the little snowy hand is tossed restlessly upon the coverlid, she sees glittering in the mooneams on that childish finger, the golden signet of betrothal. Sleep sought in vain o woo the eves of the mother that night. Reproachfully she asked herself, how could I have been so blind ? (but then Effic has seemed to me only a child :) but him oh, no, the wine-cup will be my child's rival; oh, no, it must not be. Effie was wilful, and her mother knew she must be cautiously dealt with ; but she knew that no mother need dispair who possesses the Effie's violet eves were open to greet the first ray of the morning sun as he peeped into her little room. She stood at the little mirror, trying with those small hands, to gather up the rich tresses that seemed so impatient of confinement. How would could she fail to know that she was fair ? for it ?" she read in every face she met ; but there was one, (and she was hastening to meet him) whose eye had noted with a lover's pride every shining ringlet, and azure vein and flitting blush ; his words were soft and low, and skilfally chosen ; and so she tied What is a despairing woman, who, on her knees implores the life of her child from him who holds it in his power! She is thrust rulely aside and he departs. He leaves her alone to watch the death agony

" Do you remember, my child, the summer evening we sat upon the piazza, when a dusty, travel-stained man come up the steps and askel for a "supper," Do you ellect his bloated, distigured face? Ef-" Not that wreck of a man, mother." said Effic, (covering her eyes with her hands to shut him out from her sight.) "Yes, that was all that remained that dorious intellect, and that form made after God's own immage. I looded round upon your noble father-then-upon him, an | (taking Effie's little hand and point ing to the ring that encircled it.) your ear, my daughter, I now breathe my mother's prayer for me-God help you to choose the right ! "

The bright head of Effie sank upon her mother's breast, and with a gush of tears, she drew the golden circlet from her finger, and placed it in her mother's hand. "God bless you, my child,," said the happy mother, as she led her back to their quiet home. Fanny Fern.

THE WIT OF A GERMAN LAWYER. There are many stratagems in war, and as many, it may well be said, in love or law. We have heard oftentimes how the stratagems of love have outwitted parental vigilance, but we never heard of a case where laws so effectually aided Hymen as related in a Bavarian journal. The translation may not be so good as Dr. Kraister might give, but runs to the effect that a young man of Nuremberg, who had no fortune, requested a lawyer, a friend of his, to recommend him to a family where he was a daily visitor, and where was a handsome daughter who was to have a large fortune. The lawyer agreed: but the father of the young lady who property the young man had. The law. versaid he did not exactly know, but he would inquire. The next time he saw his young friend, he asked him if he had any property at all.

"No," replied he. "Well," said the lawyer, "would you suffer any one to cut off your nose if he would give you twenty thousand dollars

"Not for the world."

reason for as' ing." shid:

the jewel.

confidence and affections of her child.