—Our community was shocked last Saturday to learn of the death of our former townsman, Mr. W. L. Bird which occurred about 5 a. m., that day at his home at Hartsville, where he moved less than a year ago. He was sick only about ten days and died of inflammation of the stomach. Had he lived until tomorrow he would have been 37 years old. Mr. Bird was a contractor and builder and with his partner, Mr. J. Murray Porter, erected the new school building at this place which has been admired by so many visitors and is the pride of our town. He was a quiet, peaceable, good citizen, an honest, upright man. He was a member of the Baptist church and also a mason. His remains, accompanied by his family, Mr. E. G. Funderburk and several other friends were brought to Taxahaw, his old home, and interred in the family burying ground there on Sunday with Masonic honors after funeral services by Rev. R. J. Blackmon. His wife and three children, his stepdaughter and his aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Bird of Taxahaw, and a large number of relatives and friends mourn his untimely death.

IN MEMORIAM.

It is fitting that some tribute be paid to the memory of those whose lives have been without reproach. To say something appropriate of the life and memory of Frank D. Green is my purpose; that I shall fail I know for it is hard to write of him as he was.

He was born and raised at the old homestead in this county, he breathed his last there at 12 o'clock noon on October 20th, last.

I knew him for years; I saw him in the sanctity of his home and amidst the rush and anxiety of business life and he was ever the same patient, cultured, christian gentleman. His character and life were spotless, his neighbors, those that knew him best, will bear witness to that.

He was a most modest, unassuming man, he never took an intoxicating drink and a word of profanity never escaped his lips.

The world knew him as an upright business man, prompt to meet every obligation, faithful to fulfill every promise and true to every instinct and honor.

But it was in his home where the true purity and unselfishness of his life shone forth so beautifully. Since the death of his father he has kept the old home intact for his mother and sisters.

To them he was husband, father and brother and life can never be quite so bright to them since he is gone.

How patient and unselfish he was in his devotion to them only their aching hearts can tell, but there is no bitterness in their grief for he was a perfect man and his end was peace. The day before he died he spoke to Mrs. T. C. Green of seeing such beautiful lights; even then mortality was putting on immortality and the curtain of eternity was removed long enough for him to see into that city where there is neither day nor night, but God himself is the light thereof.

We were present and saw him die and as we gazed on his peaceful, calm countenance we involuntarily exclaimed "O death where is thy sting."

No child in a fond mother's arms ever sank into unconsciousness more peacefully than he fell into that sleep from which he will awaken no more on this earth. He was dead, his spirit had returned unto God who gave it, but the noble life he lived, the virtues he exemplified, the good influence he exerted, the happiness he cast over those around him and the host of mourners who followed him to his final repose are a monument to his memory more enduring than the hardest granite and an epitaph more eloquent than the Bard of any age could compose.

He was buried Friday evening at Camp Creek church by the side of his father after a most appropriate and beautiful service by his pastor, Rev. Joseph T. Dedy from the texts: "Be ye therefore ready also" and "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

When all that was mortal had returned unto earth the newly made mound was covered with flowers and we left him there until the earth and sea shall give up their dead.

He sleeps in honor, not a sound shall stir his last repose, A host of Gods encamps around To save him from his foes.

He has no fears of death nor life, He's past their travails now, No songs of peace nor sounds of strife Can ruffle his calm brow.

What cares he now for man's great griefs, He rests serene in that calm spot.

At last he's found that great relief And until now he knew it not.

He sleeps, no wallings of despair Can penetrate that mound of soil, No voice can call him up from there Save one, that of Almighty God.

The devotion existing between he and his family was great indeed and their grief is touching. To the aged mother, and fond sisters whose hearts almost died with him that day, we can only murmur "May God temper the wind to the shorn lamb."

The brothers who know that his council was always so true can honor him most by walking in his footsteps, and may they all ever remember that "blessed are they that die in the Lord."

A Friend.
