Hold Cotton And Cut The are able to buy cotton at six cents Sixty Bales of cotton Burned at Acreage.

Only Solution for Saying Farmers From great Loss, - Mr. Webb. of Inman & Company, Show How South May Avert a Panic.

reenville News.

With the sensational jun.ping and slumping of the cotton market, farmers are in the air, and ates. Foley's Honey and Tar is while they are refusing to sell at prevailing prices there is no direct ntimation that the plan to reduce the acreage will be put into effect in all of the producing States. Many plans have been suggested. Some tools over in Georgia have undertaken to burn a part of the crop, but they did not even scorch themselves by the little bonfire.

Southern mills in the Piedmont Greater is the outlook for the fusection for Iman & Company, ture It rests, however upon the makes the sensible suggestion of individual members. See to. it, holding a part of this year's crop brethren, that you bear this well and reducing the acreage next spring one-forth. Much of the Let her principals become a part amount held today will have to be of your every day lives, a daily thrown on the market, but there habit, a delight, as ever present will be no use to hold and plan inspiration, remembering that her big crops for the coming year. The effect of that would be to drive the present price down to a lower She places a firm reliance on the figure, with no hope of better prices for the future crop.

In speaking of the outlook, Mr. Webb said:

"In 1898 the south raised crop of eleven and one-fourth million bales and we had a million bales surplus at that time which gave us over twelve and onefourth million bales. The first of September, 1904, the world was practically bare of cotton. had very little surplus on hand. Now admit that this crop will be twelve and one-fourth million bales. The world will take over eleven million bales of our cotton. Say the farmers reduce the acre age next year one-forth, or enough to raise about ten million bales. If they do this I do not see any reason why they should not receive from 9 to 10 cents for the remainder of this crep and next year's crop. In 1898 good cotton sold as low as 5 cents, but you must remember that everything else was cheaper. Farmers could afford to raise cotton that year tomer by telling him of a similar two cents a pound cheaper than oversight. So I wound it up and they can now. and reduce their acreage one-half. That would insure them a good price for the cotton they buy at six cents and also next year's crop.

"The only solution I see is to hold a part of this crop and reduce acreage at least one-fourth ."
