whom none were more zealous than Mr. H. A. Sally and Dr. J. W. Lowman. The year, fruitful of events, and to be rich in the historic past, is another added to the roll of centuries, replete with errors, goodness and mistakes. By these may we profit. Its good works may be garnered for imitation in the future while its mistakes and errors may well be remembered only to be strewn along the pathway of the future as warnings in life's coming years. The year, the eventful year, is dying. Its wail is heard on the evening blast, yet, in the language of Prentice:

"No funeral train Is sweeping past; yet on the stream and wood.

With melancholy light, the moon beams rest. Like a pale, spotless shroud; the air stired As by a mourners sigh; and on yon cloud, That floats so still and placidly through heaven. The spirits of the seasons seem to stand, Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's solemn form,

And Winter, with his aged locks,-and breathe,

In mournful cadences, that come abroad A melancholy dirge o'er the dead year, Gone from the earth forever."

With new resolutions let South Carolina, full of the elements of prosperity, press onward, until culminating in Calhoun's grandest prophecies, she shall achieve for herself the brighest dreams of her chivalric children.

The stock law and other questions before the people are too distracting for a holiday letter, and it becomes the lover of harmony just now to add no single word to distraction. For the coming year let us trust that nothing will divide the party of honesty and of progress but that peace and harmony like the benediction of Heaven may span our fair, sunny, land with her radiant bow. FESTUS.

lishing offices to be paid for by wring ing taxes from the people? It is full time to stop. Although this is but a little State, it appears as though we must have as many officers, commissions and public institutions as New York, Pennsylvania, or other large commonwealths of the Union. There are only five hundred thousand people in South Carolina, leaving out of calculation the colored people .-We do not mean to count out the negroes, but they are not tax-payers to any considerable extent, as their emancipation from slavery is too recent for them to have had opportunity to accumulate property. And yet every legislative session brings a
