beautify society. Her's is the work of moulding the plastic materials of youth and infancy into proportions of form and beauty .-The canvass has occasionally glowed with the touches of her pencil and brush, and the "marble been made to speak" with her chisel and genius, yet her mission is not to work upon wood or marble, but upon the mind. She seizes it in the first dawnings of intelligence and reason and infuses into it its first knowledge of things, and its first impressions of beauty. She gives by her teachings and her assiduous attention and kindness the impress of future character, intellectually, and morally. She developes and fashions the individual man, and thus controls, regulates and governs the world, by a power behind the throne greater than the throne itself. She is the partner of man, dividing his sorrows and heightening his joys, clinging to him as the forest vine entwines the sturdy oak, in prosperity, and drooping over him tenderly as the weeping willow in his afflictions, spreading flowers, and dispersing gloom all along the journey of mortal life, and smoothing at last the pillow of death. She is the di vine Peri, the guarian angel of this world, that shields from the harm and hardness of life, and finally opens the gates of paradise, bearing in her sacred palms the consecrated tear of penitence.
