My growing talk of olden times, My growing thirst for early news, My growing apathy for rhymes, My growing late of crawds and noise,
My growing late of crowds and noise,
My growing fear of catching cold,
All tell me in the plainest voice— I'm growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff, I'm growing dimmer in the eye, I'm growing fainter in my laugh, I'm growing deeper in my sigh: I'm growing careless of my dress I'm growing frugal of my gold, I'm growing wise, I'm growing—yes— I'm growing old!

I feel it in my changing taste, I see it in my changing air, I see it in my growing waist, I see it in my snowing hair; A thousand hints proclaim the trufh, As plain as truth was ever told, That even in my vaunted youth I'm growing old!

Ah me! my very laurels breathe
The tale in my reluctant ears;
And every boon the hours bequeath,
But makes me debtor to the years. E'en Flattery's honeyed words declare The secret she would fain withhold, And tell me in "How young you are!"
I'm growing old!

Thanks to the years whose rapid flight
My sombre muse too sadly sings; Thanks for the gleams of golden light

That tint the darkness of their wings-The light that beams from out the sky
Those heavenly mansions to undfold, Where all are blest, and none may sigh, "I'm growing old!"

JEFF. DAVIS .-- HE GOTS VIGOROUSLY FOR THE SCALP OF GEN. SHERMAN.

The St Louis Times, of Friday, publisher the following letter from Mr. Jefferson Davis, addressed to Col. W. F. Mellen, a former Confederate officer, touching certain matters in Gen. Sherman's book:

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 27. DEAR SIR: Please accept my thanks for your kind letter of 19th instant, and the accompanying copy of a St. Louis paper containing an extract from the forthcoming work of Gen. W. T. Sherman. My absence delayed the receipt of your letter and this reply to it.

The malice that seeks to revive the nefariously concected and long since exploded slander which connected my name with the assassination of President Lincoln is quite in character with the man who so conducted his invasion of the South as to render "Sherman's bummers" the synonym of pillage, arson cruelty to the helpness, and mur-der of non-combatants, and who closed his career of arson with a false accusation against Gen. Hampton in regard to the burning of Columbia, S. C.

But the question arises, why did General Sherman at the date of his reported convertion of President Libcoln?

Gen Sherman never was personally acquainted with me, and from those who knew me, either in the United States army or in civil life, surely learned nothing to justify such suspicion. In the conduct of the war between the States, despite of many baseless accusations, we can proudly point to a record which shows a strict adherence to the usages of war between civilized nations. On what then did the suspicion of General Sherman rest? Was it not that, proceeding on the rule of judging others by oneself, he ascribed to me the murderous and malicious traits of his own nature?

He reports a conversation with President e course which as a soldier he must have known was usual and proper towards prisoners of war. Did he hope to get instructions for the slaughter of the confederacy's President and Cabinet officers, as set forth in the orders of Col. Dahlgreen, when he made his raid against Richmond! If the goodnatured, characterastic reply of President Liucoln taught him that murder was not the approved measure, it seems to have failed to inspire him with the generosity and chivalry which ever adorns the character of the true soldier and gentleman.

Among the articles of the surrender of General J. E. Johnson, there was one pro-hibiting military expeditions in the country east of the Cattahoochie river. That was the best consideration obtained for the surrender of armies, arms, munitions and manufactories in that section, and it was in violation of that article that the brigade of cavalry, by which I was captured, was scouring the country and freely taking from the unprotected people the little which was left to them for their future sulsistence. From the statement of General Sherman we learn that a story had been told to the effect that I was carrying in wagons millions. of specie to the South, and therefore we and receive an itemized account of such are left to conclude, was made that expedition in violation of the agreement of surrender. Though the story of the millions of specie is now admitted by General Sherman to have been a fiction, the admission is made in such terms as would lead the roader to suppose I had been travelling with wagon transportation, and had a few thousand dollars of specie in a valise. But neither supposition would be true. I had recently joined the wagon train, and was about to leave it when captured; my only baggage was a valise, which was packed on a mule and it contained no specie. The few thousand dollars of specie were in a pair of saddle-bags belonging to Secretary Reagan. Whether that money ever reached the United States Treasury Mr Reagan, from whom it was taken, may be able to learn after he shali have assumed his functions as Representative in the United States Congress.

Should the course of the commanding general of the army, in attempting at this late day to resuscitate a defunct slander against the President of the late Confederacy, and to which slander not even suborned witnesses could give the semblance of truth, be taken as the exponent of the feelings of the army, that arm of the general government would seem to be ill-suited to the task, ment would seem to be ill-suited to the task, however, had her reply. "I am perfectly of late so largely assigned to it, of preserving willing," she retorted; "but it is just sixcivil order and of restoring harmony among teen thousand years since you were here bethe people of the United States. For public fore, and you left without paying; settle the considerations it is to be hoped that the in- old score, and I will trust you on the new."

eradicable maliguity of Sherman may be an exception to the prevailing sentiments of the Inited States Army.

Again thanking you for your friendly consideration, I am very truly yours. JEFFERSON DAVIS.

THE ENERGY OF THE SOUTHERN PEO-PLE .- A vast amount of nonsense is written about the dislike of the white population of the South to labor, and a great deal of gratuitous counsel is given to the citizens of the reconstructed States, the burden of which is that if they wish to prosper they must go into the fields and do their own The Chicago Tribune, in an exceed ingly self complacent article on this subject, gravely says that in the cotton States "no white man is willing to accept social degradation by working in the field," when it is a well-known fact that the most productive regious of several of the cotton States are those in which the negro population is small, and the greater portion of the labor employed upon the cotton crops is performed by whites. Of course the effects of the slave system cannot be overcome in a day, and there is a class of men who, having been accustomed to living without labor, exhibit shiftlessness and want of energy under the new conditions which govern their life .-But the Southern people as a mass have shown great pluck and energy in, adapting themselves to their changed circumstances, the best evidence of which is found in the rapid recuperation of their industries and business interest in those States which have relieved themselves from the plundering rule of the carpet-baggers. If the large landholders prefer to employ themselves in superintending hired laborers instead of going into the field and doing work which they can hire negroes to do for twenty dollars a month or less, we do not see that they are doing differently from what is done by peo-ple who can afford it all over the world; or why they should be lectured for conducting their own business in their own way .- N.

How the Jury Stood .- A New York reporter made exhaustive efforts to get the exact status of the several members of the Beccher-Tilton jury and believes that he has ascertained how each juror has stood on the issue of Beecher's guilt during their protracted consultation. It is possible that he has made one or two immaterial a istakes in classifying the jurors, but the following is given as the way they stood last evening. It will be seen that no two of them are supposed to agree exactly, and that their dif-ferences take the widest possible range. Without assuming to indorse the report, we give it as it has reached us:

A queer tale of love comes to us from Duluth, Minu. Two young men loved a maiden fair, of that breezy paradise. She smiled on both, and, as has happened since, the days of Helen, there was a bloody feud. They had conflicts concerning her until the thing was getting monotonous, when youth number one suggested an adjustment of their differences upon a commercial basis. He offered to take $100 and forever there-Lincoln, from which is to be inferred a de- after hold his peace. Number two scorned sire to have authority for departing from to accept the proposition. The other offered to give this amount for session, which was also refused with seorn. Bids were made until the amount of $160 was offered by the sighing swain number one, in the shape of his note at ninety days. which the party of the second part took. and two loving souls were united. But when the note became due, and the former lover demanded its liquidation, the fond husband refused payment on the plea of "no value received," and suit has been brought to recover the amount. The husband sets up the plea that the girl was not worth a tinker's condemnation, and for further answer states that if the plaintiff will take the fair creature off his hands he will gladly pay the note and throw in his levely bride. So the case stands at this writing.

NEW LAWS OF THE STATE.-The county commissioners, in auditing the accounts of trial justices, are new required to make them exhibit with the bill of costs all the original papers in each case in which said costs have accrued, and they are forbidden to allow any bill of costs against the county, unless accompanied by the original papers.

Any person has a right, before paying any costs in a trial justice's court, to demand costs; and, if it is not furnished, he is not compelled to pay. This itemized account is to be receipted by the trial justice when the costs are paid.

It is lawful for mechanics, also, when property is left with them for repair, to sell he same at auction, after the expiration of one year from the time when such property shall have been repaired, and the same shall be sold by any trial justice of the county in which the work is done, after advertising the sale for ten days at three of the most conspicuous places in his township. Out of the proceeds the mechanic shall be paid for his work, after costs and commissions are deducted, and the balance if any, is to be paid into the office of the clerk of the court, subject to the owner's order.

A party of wits once stopped at a tavern When the feast was over, one of the members called in the hostess. "Angelique," he said, "I am going to give you a lesson in astronomy. Have you not heard of the great Platonic year, when every thing must return to its former condition? Know, then, that in sixteen thousand years we shall be here again on the same hour. Will you give us credit till then?" The hostess,

THE DIAMOND RING; OR HOW HE WON HER.—A young couple were occupying a rustic seat in Union Park one evening this week, and from the expression of the masculine representative's face, it was evident that he was "a goner"—drifted, as it were, over the great psychological triagara of affection, and was even then being dizzily whirled about in the frothy whirlpool of sentiment. The swimming some had no charm for him; the eagles are as nothing; and he did not even notice to big white

"Yes, sir," yelled a preacher in a Dakota church, one Sunday mornings, there's more lying, and swearing, and stealing, and general deviltry to the square inch in this here town than all the rest of the American country;" and then the congregation got up and dumped the preacher out of the window.

He held the old shirt up by the neck before discarding it forever, but he wasn't mourning for the garment. He only said, "I wish I had all the drinks again that have gone through that old neckband."
