What the Sunday School Does

- 1. It employs the best men and women in the community for teachers.
2. It furnishes a circulating library; so that every pupil can have fifty books to read each year.
3. It gives newspapers to the pupils, with many excellent little stories.
4. It teaches the young to sing, and furnishes singing books to those who need them.
5. It gives once a year a delightful picnic, or excursion, or celebration, to Sunday school scholars.
6. It has its annual conventions with processions, bands of music, with eloquent speeches or lectures, and fills the largest churches with flowers, songs and happiness.
7. Children who cannot read, it teaches to read.
8. It offers prizes in the shape of Bibles, Testaments, and other good books, medals or picture cards.
9. If the pupils are sick, the good Sunday school teacher or superintendents visit them.
10. It gives fifty lessons a year in that book of books, the Bible.
11. It trains the children in the practice of benevolence, love, obedience to parents, truthfulness, kindness to one another and purity of language.
12. It seeks to lead them to love Jesus and to walk in the path of wisdom.
13. It teaches them the golden rule—to do unto others as they would have others do unto them.

AGRICULTURAL, & C.

Turnips. The Turnip has been cultivated as a garden esculent for centuries, and has been cultivated in field culture in England for the last century, to the great benefit of the English soil, and for the increased production of beef, mutton and fine wool. To such a state of perfection have the English brought the culture of turnips, that they have revolutionized the agriculture of the Kingdom, and the turnip crop of England is annually worth more than the cotton crop of the United States. Lord Townshend was among the first to introduce the field culture of turnips into England, and with so much assiduity did he combat the strong prejudices of his countrymen, that in derision they called him Turnip Townshend. England is now reaping more substantial benefit from the philanthropic labors of her "Turnip Townshend," than from all the glory of her Marlboroughs, Nelsons or Wellingtons. If the turnip crop is so valuable to England, how much more so may it be in the Southern States, where they do not have to be pulled or hoisted? Here are the natural sheep pastures of the world, and with the Ruta Baga and other turnips, to help out the feed, the Southern States can surpass England in the production of wool, as much as they do now in cotton. To have early garden turnips, the seed should come from 6 to 8 miles Northern latitude. Early Dutch Turnips may be sown in January and February, and in August and September for fall crops. Plant in drill, twelve or fourteen inches apart, and thin out to six inches for field culture. Sow common Turnips in August, September and October. The Ruta Baga should be planted in drills, two feet apart, and thinned out to twelve or fourteen inches. The Ruta Baga is destined soon to work a great change in Southern agriculture. They are as easily managed as the common Turnip, are more nutritive, keep much longer, and afford greens equal to collards, if not superior. Stock of all kinds are fond of them, and from their rich golden color, sweet and delicate flavor, are unsurpassed for the table. Farmers, try the Ruta Baga, and learn how it saves the crop! The Ruta Baga is not inclined to seed in this climate; but this is a benefit rather than an objection, as thereby the root keeps sound much longer. Save the seed of other kinds of turnips, transplant them and cut the tap-root off. Seed thus saved, will hold its original qualities for years, but it is the interest of every planter and gardener to change seed occasionally. Seed from Old or New England, Tennessee or North Carolina, is preferable for a change. The turnip delights in a rich sandy soil, but they will grow in almost any soil that is rich enough. Land fresh from the woods suits them best; a piece trod by sheep or cattle yields enormously in turnips, and is one of the most profitable of the farm. [Southern Cultivator. Ruta Bagas kept with us this year fit for the table until May.—Ed. So. Cult.

TOMATOES.—This belongs to the potatoe family, and like the potatoe, is found wild in South America. It is of quite recent introduction to the kitchen garden, and now ranks highest among the culinary vegetables. Tomato seed may be planted from about the middle of March through the month of April. They are as tender as beans, and those who would have them early must protect them from frost. They may be sown broadcast, or in drills, and after danger of frost is over, may be transplanted as safely as cabbages. It is found to improve the quantity and quality of the fruit, to stick the vines, and train them up on bushes, like the English Pea. The fruit ripens earlier, is not much inclined to rot, and is much better flavored, than fruits that ripen on the ground. To save seed, select the earliest and ripest, wash them with the hand, and wash the pulp from the seed, spread the seed in shallow dishes, and dry in the shade; when thoroughly dry put away in paper bags for future use. The large smooth red tomato is the best for cooking, and the pear and cherry shaped, for pickling.—Communicated by Dr. Canak from Transactions of the Southern Central Agricultural Society.

RAISING COLTS.—Never expect to have a good horse if you cram your colt; it cannot be done.—The old adage in Vermont, "A ragged colt makes the best horse," means everything. Your colt, then, should run with its dam until it is nursed up to the condition of the stomach which will enable it to digest solid food. Then take your colt and let it have abundance of free, cold air to begin with, and in addition to that, avoid the feeding of grain until it is three years old, as you would avoid feeding brandy and water to your children when they are little. It is astonishing how many nice colts are ruined by the excessive use of stimulating grain food in their infancy, so to speak. Let your colt mature slowly, its bones grow properly, its digestive functions be properly organized, its flesh in the proper condition—never fat, horse fat is the poorest fat in the world—keep it upon the best hay in winter, and good, sweet pasture in summer, and you will make the best possible horse of that colt.—Dr. Loring.

SMALL FARMS AND FRUIT.—A New York farmer makes the following suggestions in regard to small farms: In many cases where large farms are divided, there is no orchard; but the enterprising beginner may do well by raising small fruits, while his orchard is growing. A neighbor is making more off the Doolittle raspberries, by selling fruits and plants—both grown on the same land—from a few acres than most men make on one hundred acres by common farming. These and other small fruits may be grown between the rows of apple trees in a young orchard. The grower of small fruits may do better growing strawberries, raspberries and blackberries, so as to have a succession all through the season; thus requiring less help at any time, while business can be better managed and controlled.

POTATO YEAST.—Boil one pint of hops in two pints of water, strain the water from the hops, grate five good sized potatoes, put in a kettle, add one cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, one of ginger, boil ten minutes, add more water if too thick. Strain through a colander, cool, add yeast to rise, bottle. It will keep a number of weeks.—American Agriculturalist.
