Grape Growing.

I have said that with a view to complete success in grape culture, it was necessary to maintain the health and vigor of the foliage for the longest possible period.

The foliage of the vine, under these circumstances, will be most likely to continue healthy and vigorous, and will be seen to be several shades darker than when the surface of the soil is allowed to become hard and the weeds and grass permitted to grow.

When, therefore, it is considered that almost the entire substance of the fruit is taken up and secured, through the immediate agency of the foliage, that through it is elaborated every particle of saccharine matter, that enters into the composition of the grape; it will be seen that if these leaves are partially destroyed or their capacity weakened before the fruit is fully ripened and perfected, its richness and sweetness will be proportionably lessened and its value greatly diminished.

"Four grapes" without the aid of bountifully supply of healthy foliage, must forever remain sour, and green, and immature fruit remain unripe and worthless.

There are many other reasons why thorough tillage, constant and continued cultivation is indispensable to growing repeated crops of good grapes not the least of which is the fact that short of such treatment the vine will not only not perfect its fruit, but will also fail to produce and mature wood and fruit buds for the succeeding crop.

But I must not pursue this subject further, and will therefore close, but not without reminding those who intend to plant vineyards, that unless they are prepared and fully determined to give them the needed attention and culture, they will but damage an enterprise which, but for such neglect and bad treatment, will certainly prove eminently remunerative and in every way successful.

Care of Stock.

Work Horses.—Work horses and mules, if they have work to do now, need more than usual care. Let them have ample stable room and bedding. Let them never be put up without being rubbed dry, and their feet and legs cleaned.

Cows.—Such as are to furnish milk through the winter should be as well tended as a riding or driving horse, with warm shelter, good bed, perfect cleanliness, with bran and cornmeal, and sugar beet or ruta baga. A good cow pays well for the best attention. Cows in calf should be comfortable and very quiet. Do not make them very fat, but keep them in strong condition.

Hogs.—Continue the feeding of hogs for slaughter, as heretofore directed, until you get rid of them. Give them a little salt occasionally, or corn soaked in salt water, and charcoal of rotted wood, and let them be very quiet. In slaughtering do not indulge servants in the brutal practice of bleeding them to death, without first striking on the head; nor do not allow them to be raced around in catching them for slaughter. Such practice is injurious to the quality of the meat. Store hogs should be kept in thrifty condition, and not allowed to sleep about manure heaps, or other filthy places.—American Farmer

How to Make Good Coffee.

A correspondent of the Southern Cultivator gives the following recipe for making good coffee:

1. Procure a good article, whether Mocha, Java or Rio—the first being best of all, but high priced—being careful that it is in a perfect and undamaged state.

2. Roast—not parch, bake or burn—with a strong heat, and in a tightly covered vessel, if practicable, keeping it continually moving, and make the operation as brief as possible. It is sufficiently cooked when the oil exudes and gives it a glossy appearance, and not before; and uncooked coffee is a nerve disturbing drug. Carefully avoid burning, as a single charcoal grain will spoil the whole.

3. Grind fine, and just before using.

4. Pour boiling water on the coffee, and allow it to stand a short time to steep; or, if you boil it at all, let it be but a minute or two. Boiling gives more strength from the same amount of coffee, but not so fine a flavor.

5. Make it very strong, but delude with boiled milk, adding cream if you have it, and sweeten to your taste. We use at least two parts of rich milk to our coffee—making the latter, however, very strong. Coffee thus made, is drink fit any one.

CURING HAMS.—Among the suggestions proper to the season, we should not omit the curing properly the bacon we have fattened with so much care. The following recipe will make as good bacon as any one may wish to eat: For one hundred pounds of meat, take six gallons of water, nine pounds of salt, half fine and half coarse, three pounds of brown sugar, one quart of molasses, three ounces of saltpetre, and one ounce of potash. Boil and skim it well, and let it stand unskimmed; then, having rubbed your meat with fine salt, pour this brine over it; let it remain six weeks, and then hang up and smoke.—American Farmer.
