

Helping You Hold Your Crop

The Federal Reserve Banking System, established by the government, stands back of the cotton planter.

Our membership in it gives us special facilities to help him hold his crop until he can obtain fair prices for it, instead of rushing it to the market.

We can borrow at special rates from our Federal Reserve Bank on loans secured by warehoused agricultural products.

Before you market your crop come in and talk the matter over with us. We may be in a position to save you some money.

Better Farming in the South PEANUTS AS A CASH CROP

It is the Money Crop that gives real profit to the farm and a Money Crop can only be a crop of a known market value immediately convertible into money in any town at any time.

The problem of supplying the Southern farmer with a cash market for other crops that would yield as much or more profit than he derives from the cotton crop, has engaged the attention of the farmer and his friends, and with the assistance of the Boll Weevil, they have found a solution of the problem in Peanuts.

The Peanut crop offers wonderful opportunities. It can be grown over the entire South with profit. It reaches its perfection in growth and yield on well drained, gray, sandy loam soils such as exist in the Coastal Plains along the Atlantic Seaboard, which territory is now either occupied or is being rapidly encroached upon by the Boll Weevil.

There is a constant demand at a "Cash Surrender Value", from a market that would be difficult to glut with the peanut, for the reason that there are five avenues of profit.

First: Progressive oil mills throughout the South are eager buyers of the Peanut and offer a spot cash market at very remunerative prices. The oil is in great demand.

Second: The nut and vines are a splendid feed for cattle, producing a quick growth of flesh and tenderness. A profit is the result of the sale of this feed and it is a certainty.

RUSSIA

There should be but little criticism of the Russians in the present crisis. It is true that disaffection has arisen in their midst, due to intrigue and the creation of false impressions, and disaster has come to them in consequence, threatening disintegration of their government. But when it is considered that these people have lived in slavery of the bitterest character for hundreds of years, a slavery which permitted no enlightenment, but held them under the rigors of the law to a condition of mere beasts of burden, performing their labor each day, as the cow, the ox or the mule, with nothing to enlighten their lives, or to illuminate their minds into a knowledge of what their true position in life should be, and then for those people suddenly, as it were in the twinkling of an eye, to emerge from that to obscurity into the refulgent glare of a new found liberty, with darkness dispelled, and the blind made to see, is it to be wondered that they should have become reckless in the joy of this new found liberty, and should for the while, revel in unbridled license momentarily forgetting that their conduct might bring them to worse conditions, through German domination, than ever endured before. They are even now covering and ascribing the selves as only a great nation could, and a people who, as the poet says, had found the greatest riches in the world, and they are blind to the side upon which they are standing, as they endeavor to see, they will see.
