The Two Andrews.

"I say, I say, General Jackson, for fear you should think I have some axe to grind, because I try so hard to keep you at my poor house all night, I will agree to keep your free of expense!"

expostulated the landlord of the only inn in the village of Jefferson, Ashe County, North Carolina, to General Jackson, late one evening in the autumn of 18—, as he entered his carriage to pursue his journey toward Tennessee.

"The Blue Ridge is infested with banditti, and you will certainly be robbed and possibly murdered before morning. I beseech you stay!"

"You are very kind, sir, and I thank you," replied the General, "but I shall proceed, and try and reach the Tennessee line at all events. I have no fears of being molested. Drive on, Ned, briskly. Adieu, gentlemen, all!" and the old hero drove off at a rapid pace.

"Hilloa there, youngster!" cried the landlord, to a slim, weary, flaxen-headed stripling, standing in the motley crowd in front of the tavern, "if you are going to Tennessee, you had better jump up behind and go along with the General; it's as cheap as walking."

"Sure enough, I reckon I'd better, and thank you," replied the young man, jumping up, behind the coach as it drove off.

They rode on quietly for some hours, until they began to ascend the mountain, when the General, hearing a slight cough behind, called out sternly: "Who's that?"

"It's me, sir—Andrew Johnson. I am a traveler, on my way to Tennessee, and I thought I might get a lift on your carriage, sir. I beg your pardon, sir."

"You are quite welcome, sir, to my carriage. Come forward, and take a seat with me."

"Thank you, sir; but as the mountain is rather steep here, I'll jump off ain side, in advance of the coach. I had not gone far before he saw a man ahead of him, ascending the mountain; he appeared to be intoxicated. He lurched this and that way, staggering backward and forward; now his knees would double up, and he would miss a step, as if the earth had suddenly vanished before him; then he would cross his legs, and a lurch would send him diagonally across the road. He stopped and braced himself up, so as nearly to fall backward, and then drifted helplessly along. Presently he turned an angle in the road, and was out of sight.

"That fellow is beastly drunk!" remarked the General.

"Drunk! Not much, sir," laughed the young man. "He's no more drunk than I am. He's playing 'possum, and means mischief. Look there! he's lying in the road."

As they drove up, he raised himself lazily and hailed them: "Hic! ah—I say gentlemen, can't you give a man a lift! I—I—hic! can't walk; I'm loaded too heavily with a—d mean whiskey."

"Then stay where you are and get rid of it," replied the General sternly.

"The devil!" exclaimed the man, springing to his feet with the agility of a cat. He gave a keen whistle, and planted himself in front of the coach. Three men sprang out of from the bushes and made a rush for the carriage.

Quick as thought, the General sprang upon one of them, and they rolled over in the road together. A dull, crashing sound was next heard over the road and a second one rolled over in the dust, propelled by the loaded whip in the powerful hands of the driver. The young man, by a timely shot, fired and brought down a third, and then sprang to the assistance of the General, who still fought manfully with the herculean antagonist, while the driver engaged the remaining robber.

"Stand back! stand back!" cried the General to the young man; "we are man to man, I'll give the villian fair play. By the Eternal, I have you now!" and he threw his antagonist over, apparently lifeless.

"Are you hurt, my boy?" asked the General. "And you, too, Ned? Where is Ned?"

"Here, massa," replied the boy, puffing up the road. "My robber coward, he run, I golly. He! he! he! I save one, massa save one and de young gentlemans save one. He! he! he!"

All this occurred in less time than it takes to record it.

"But you, General, are you hurt?" "No; nothing but a few bruises, thank God! But look here; one of them is stirring. You, sir, and Ned, pinion his hands, while I examine the others."

None of them were found to be dead. Two were only stunned, and the third had received a pistol shot through the shoulder, and was crouching in affright.

They were all pinioned, and a council was held, when it was determined to disarm them and let them go rather than be detained on the road. No further incidents befell our travelers during their jaunt. On their separation in Tennessee, the General gave the young man much good advice. He recounted to him his own history, and bade him aspire to be good and useful.

The General continued en route for his home in Middle Tennessee, and the young man stopped and settled in the town of Greenville, Tennessee, as a journeyman tailor. Of his subsequent career it is needless to speak; it is part of the history of our country.

M. E. D. JONESBORO, TENN., Nov. 1865

The Inducements to Come South.

The tide of immigration is setting in to this country from Europe, since the close of the war, with extraordinary increase of flow. From the first disorganization of our labor system, we have constantly urged that the South now presents to immigrants the most profitable field of labor of any section in the United States. Heretofore, even with our system of negro labor, many millions of acres of fertile land were left uncultivated, planters confining themselves principally to the culture of our great staples, and these staples, especially cotton, required most of the labor at their command. We present some figures as to the extent of our untilled lands, which must surprise even those whose attention is directed to the subject.

According to the estimate of 1860, 150,000,000 acres of land in the Southern States, most of it as fertile as any in the world, was neglected and uncultivated; the quantity, we need hardly state, has been greatly increased by the war. In 1860, Alabama, with a population of 964,201 souls, and measuring 50,722 square miles of territory, has within her limits 12,687,913 acres of uncultivated soil.

Arkansas, with 535,450 souls, and 58,128 square miles, has 8,609,938 such acres.

Delaware, with 112,116 souls and 2,120 square miles, has 367,230 acres.

Florida, with 140,425 souls, and 59,629 square miles, has 2,273,008 acres.

Georgia, 1,087,000 souls, 52,009 miles, 18,587,723 acres.

Kentucky, 1,155,689 souls, 37,280 square miles, 11,519,059 acres.

Louisiana, 708,092 souls, 46,431 square miles, 765,879 acres.

Maryland, 1,212,649 souls, 71,124 square miles, 18,306 acres.

Mississippi, 1,305 souls, 47,156 square miles, 11,703,556 acres.

Missouri, 1,822,012 souls, 67,880 square miles, 17,737,938 acres.

North Carolina, 983,622 souls, 50,704 square miles, 17,245,685

South Carolina, 703,708 souls, 29,385 square miles, 11,623,866 acres.

Tennessee, 1,109,891 souls, 45,801 square miles, 13,457,960 acres.

Virginia, 1,246,620 souls, 41,251 square miles; Western Virginia, 349,698 souls, 20,541 square miles; uncultivated lands of the two Virginias, 19,578,949 acres.

Here is a field for the hardy and industrious immigrant that never was or surpassed in the history of the country, and we earnestly hope that the organizations being formed throughout the country, will shortly bring to our rich and extensive tracts of fertile soil the amount of labor necessary to develop our full agricultural resources.

The Indians of the plains are again on the war path. A party of 200 Indians attacked a coach on the Butterfield's Express route, last Sunday week, near Downess Spring, six of the passengers and the express messenger were killed. The savages afterward burned the buildings at Downess Springs and Bluff Station together with a large amount of other valuable property.

The Mayor of Mobile has prohibited the railroads and steamers from "importing" negroes into that city.
