THE YORKVILLE ENQUIRER.

The arrival of mails is the great event of the editorial day. An editor likes 'a fat tasil,' that is plenty of letters with money in them. He is a mercenary dog. He likes to receive communications which save him labor, such as may fill a place ig his columns without being shortened or fixed up.' He is a lary follow.

His detestation of a long badly written man- wis generally imagined. No one is happy with uscript, which may have a grain of interest lurking upon its blots and seratches, and which therefore, he feels it his duty to read, has never been expressed in words, and never can be. He is an irascible person, rather.

He likes to receive a letter from a remote place; telling him that his paper is the best in the world. He is a modest man.

Let no one imagine that fear in the perusal of the last number that she does not notice his enterance for five minutes .-How he blushes. Forms a high opinion of her moral, social and intellectual worth.

He likes, when two hundred miles from home, to see a backwoodsman sitting on a stump in front of his log cabin on a fine Sunday morning, lost in the columns of his incomaparable sheet-say for example, the Enquirer! This gives him an idea of of the universality of his genius.

He like all those exchanges which have the discrimination to copy anything from his columns, particularly if the article is preceeded by some commendatory observation. But-He abhors an exchange which copies without credit. He has a good mind to cease exchanging with such a fellow. But magnanimity forbids.

He likes excessively to see an article of his in the London Times, credited to an American paper.

Why couldn't they put the credit properly? is what he would like to know.

He likes to see himself copied into John O'Groat's journal, Oregonian, or the Melbourne Argus. He is making himself felt at the antipodes! His voice his gone forth to the ends of the earth.

He likes to be the first to announce anything. But-

If in his eagerness to do so, he has made a man dead who is only sick, and is ignominiously corrected by a rival, and obliged himself to acknowledge the error, he don't like it.

He likes-Oh how he likes it ! to get out the best number he ever issued. He has this happen very frequently.

He likes-Oh how he dislikes a typographical error in the best phrase of the best sentence of the best article in the paper. Typo-

It is by neglecting this, by sacrificing principle to ex- pediency, that character is lost: and character iost is with difficulty regained. Besides, the first decline from right leads to others. It is like the start in sliding down hill. But there is a worse feature than even in succumbing to baseness, meanness, or wrong. Habit soon drills the moral perception so that in time men come to perpetuate, without a remorseful pang, acts at which originally they would have been astounded.
