

THE QUESTION as to the ultimate effects of emancipation on the negro race continually arises, and there are various opinions as to its solution.

For ourselves, however, we must say we are not willing to accept of that solution. There are many reasons, we confess, that indicate it, but they are not necessarily conclusive.

That interest consists in its tendency to sustain the value of our vested interests. Most people have a general notion that population is in some way necessary to the wealth of states; but few, we presume, are aware how simply it is of wealth, the one sufficient and necessary condition.

The fact is more clearly perceived in the value of land. A very slight examination of the census reports, of this and other countries, will show that the value of every tract of country, per acre, is in strict proportion to the people on it; and what, perhaps, will seem more singular, the number of people, in the present state of money in the world, will indicate with tolerable certainty the money value of the land on which they live.

With equal certainty can it be shown that he adds to the value of other property. The census returns of 1850, the only one to which we have access, will show the principle to be applicable to this country at least.

It will be gratifying, says the Montgomery Advertiser, to the travelling public to learn that the break in the M. & W. P. road is repaired, and that connection from this place by rail to all parts of the United States is once more complete.

The anxious seat at the Custom House is not vacant.

What Europe is Doing. In a recent number of a Northern exchange appears an article on the present political condition of Europe, which, as giving some insight into the situation there, and being in itself both instructive and interesting, we subjoin:

The European journals are filled with rumors of the revival of the Emperor Napoleon's project of a continental congress to readjust the political relations of the Old World, and definitely reconstruct the "Map of Europe."

But if Napoleon gives no sign at present, the situation of affairs on the continent abundantly accounts for the signs which are made in his name by all manner of publicists, from London to Vienna.

The invasion made by Germany upon the rights of Denmark and the public law of the world, has resulted in driving the two great German powers into an antagonism more open and threatening than at any previous moment since 1848.

Grave as are the problems which the civil war has imposed upon ourselves for solution, and seriously as the necessity for solving them must confine us for some time to come to a foreign policy rather of observation than of assertion, it is quite as plain that the European powers are involved in difficulties and straits at least as absorbing as our own.

Ex-Governor Pickens. A Charleston letter-writer thus reports the views and policy of this gentleman:

It will be gratifying, says the Montgomery Advertiser, to the travelling public to learn that the break in the M. & W. P. road is repaired, and that connection from this place by rail to all parts of the United States is once more complete.
