Book Notices.

NAMELESS. A Novel. By Fanny Murdaugh Downing Published by W. B. Smith & Co., Raleigh (N. C). This is a most remarkable book. Remarkable inasmuch as though it is a palpable imitation of portion of "Bleak House," it cannot, with justice be set down as a plagiarism whilst it has suffi cient merit in itself to make it an exceedingly interesting novel. The heroine, Lady Haughton, is a copy of Lady Dedlock, as positively as any one thing can be the copy of another. Lady Dedlock is magnificently beautiful, cold and haughty—so is Lady Haugh-ton. Lady Dedlock does not love her husband as a woman should love the man to whom she is linked in the bonds of matrimony-neither does Lady Haughton. Dickens' creation has a secret from her husband-so has our heroine. Lady Dedlock's secret is discovered—so is Lady Haugh ton's. Sir'Leicester Dedlock (Lady Dedlock's husband) is the quintescence of nobleness and magnanimity-Sir Everard Haughton (Lady Haughton's husband), is exactly the same. Sir Leicester exhibits his love and magnanimity to the greatest extent when the secret is discovered, and when the reader would look for a man in his position to act quite differently. Sir Everard Haughton acts identically the same. Lady Dedlock has a French maid, Mademoiselle Hortense, who despises her mistress, and plots her ruin. Lady Haughton has a French maid, Mademoiselle Felice, who does precisely the sr 3 thing.

All this has the apresance of a plagiarism, but it is not, and for these reasons; in the first place, the imitation is too palpable to be a plagiarism. No one in their sane senses would select the greatest of authors, and one whose works are universally read, to plagiarize from. Our author, therefore, imitated, with the knowledge that, as every one who reads her book must be familiar with Dick-ENS, and she simply submits to them her copy as an artist, who paints a picture from a model, the work of a master hand. Another reason is the one given by that great genies and critic, EDGAR A. Poe, who contended that where many points of similarity would suggest plagiarism, a corres ponding number of points of dissimilarity would relieve the author from the imputation. In justice, then, to our fair authoress, let us give these points. Lady Dedlock's secret is a guilty one. Lady Haughton had always been as pure as a woman can be: Lady Dedlock had a child of her own which her sister had taken care of. Lady Haughton took care of her dead sister's child, and kept the secret because she had made an oath to the dying mother to save her reputation. After the secret was out, Lady Dedlock fled her home, and died ere she could be found by Mr. Bucket the Detective, and Esther Summerson, her daugh ter. Lady Haughton was taken back to her husband's arms, learned to love him, and became a good wife. The book is certainly, however, a remarkable one, and the more so because it is exceedingly interesting even to one who has read Bleak House a dozen times. The diction is pure, the tale well told, and the style admirable in its simplicity.

The authoress, however, is too prone to imitate The story that Sir Everard tells his wife about the bracelet smacks too much of Othello and the handkerchief. Ladies always forget themselves in books when they give enthusiastic descriptions of the beauty of the male characters. A man likes to read of a woman's beauty, and a woman may derive pleasure from a description of a handsome man, but the latter is always nauscating to a male reader. In speaking of Mr. Hamilton, a good-fornothing scamp, after a minute description of his "majestic beauty," our authoress says : "But the face-oh! the untold, the indescribable beauty of that pale, calm face." We cannot fancy this sort of thing; we do not like to hear this style of language applied to a man.

To sum up, we think the book, with all its per fections and "imperfections on its head," is capital, and we have no doubt that Mrs. (or Miss) Downing is destined to take a conspicuous stand among the first writers of the day.

THE INVINGTON STORIES. By M. E. Dodge. James O'Kane, Publisher, New York.

This little volume is a story book for children, and we can say of it honestly and without the slightest hesitation, it is one of the best we have seen for many years. Few persons can appreciate the exceeding difficulty of writing a book of this kind. The author is apt to fall into one of the extremes-he will either produce a work above the comprehension of the younger children, or too simple for those of a more advanced age. To hit the happy medium, it is necessary to write a story which can be understood by a child of nine or ten, and that at the same time can be read with inter est by a child of fifteen or sixteen, or, in fact, by an adult. Even by this difficult standard the "Irvington Stories" are a complete success. The critic, before reading the book, handed it to some intelligent little ones, aged nine and ten. The little ones read them all, understood them, and expressed themselves delighted. The critic then read them and found them rather interesting to himself. The little critics found one fault with the book. One of them remarked of "The Drummer Boy:" "That is a pretty story, but I don't like it because it has so much about the "rebels." We endorse the sentiment. It is not in human nature, nor in common sense, to expect that our children should take pleasure in reading stories in which their fathers are abused and often belied. The Drummer Boy is the only war story in the bo k, which, so far as Southern children are concerned, would have been improved by its omission.

IS'NT HE A MAN AND A BROTHER ?- A COFFESDORdent of the Worcester (Mass.) Transcript is engaged in teaching adult negroes at Norfolk, Va. He states that though he has labored assiduously for many months, he finds great difficulty in making progress. We quote a passage from the letter. which will give an idea of the truthfulness of his statement :

Listen to this one, to whom I will put out the word fox to spell. After giving the word due thought, we hear her say have, fox! Upon asking her to try once more, she tells us that be-a-m spells fox. One evening I noted down a few of the words, which were spelled in this way, and as they may be interesting. I think I will give them, not as samples of dullness, but abrely to show that insensibility which some of them have to the sound of letters:

Large Reduction of Expenditures.—It appears, by an official statement from the United States Treasury, that the discurrements on account of the War and Navy Departments for the past morning to November were $11,147,685.00 [a.a. for the past of month has year. The reduction on account of the war Department is $8,321,899.32, and on account of the mayy $2,795,694.67. This is a very gratifying exhibit.

Missouri Legislaturs,—In the House this week, a series of resolution. Live tug negro suffrage were i troduced, and after some discussion induffutely postponed, by a vote of 53 to 5. A sarge number of radicals voted for the postponent.

The New York World, of the 1st inst., has a very ensible editorial on the "Need of the South." We copy the article entire.

THE NEED OF THE SOUTH.

THE NEED OF THE SOUTH.

We have seen a letter from a very intelligent explanter to a friend in this city, in reference to the probabilities of the early resumption of ordinary work in the Southern States. In his judgment, as in ours, the first great necessity, the second great necessity, and the third great necessity, it is to allow the interest of whites and blacks to settle the interest of whites and the relations between employer and employer and employer and the planter nor the negro is taught or allowed to rely upon himself. The Freedinen's Bureau undertakes to adjust that which is incapable of adjustment, except by a law greater than any law of Congress—the law of supply and demand.

The Free States determined that chattel slavery should cease to exist, and that the negro should be "lord of himself." Whether that lordship shall be a "heritage of we," is a matter which the negro must determine for himself, just as a white man does. One of the small fallacies of the Tribune is to assume that the difficulty about willing labor on the part of the negro, is the neglect to pay weekly wages. The bulk of the farm labor of the Free States which is hired, is hired by the year, and no farmer could afford to pay hands eight months in the year when laborers are plenty, and lose them during the four months when laborers are in demand. In harvest time the price of the Free States which is hired, is hired by the year, and no farmer could afford to pay hands eight months in the year when laborers are plenty, and lose them during the four months when laborers are in demand. In harvest time the price of a day's labor is three times that of the average. Fixity of labor is, therefore, essential. The great trouble with the planter is to have constant labor in picking time. There it is a question of ruin to be without it. No planter will work a plantation unless he can compel labor at that period to fulfil its contract honestly. Here there are two means—keeping back a large portion of the wages accumulated so that the laborer forfeits them if he fails to fulfil his agreement; and the rigor of climate, which acts as a police. A man here must provide for winter, and he must provide for summer. He freezes and he burns. But in a semi-tropical climate the negro for eight months does not burn, and need not labor; he can live almost the life of a savage. There are, indeed, four cold months; but if two-thirds of the year favors savagery, and only one-third civilization, it is not difficult to decide which will carry the day in a half or quarter civilized being. Our State laws enable the Northern farmer to enforce the fulfillment of contracts. That is about all the Southern planter needs from his State. From the Federal Government he wants nothing.

The white man of the United States is a very artificial being—the creature of centuries of progressive civilization. His wants and appetites are numerous, and he works to gratify them. The original love of laziness, inherent in all men, has been gradually worked out of him. He is as different from a black man South as a horse from the wild ass. The first thing the negro should be told is: We have made an experiment; we have, at an enormous cost, giving you the opportunity of showing whether you are capable of becoming an equal citizen of the United States. You must show that you are; you can show that you are. As for the right of suffrage, me so long as the Northern white, so long there will be no harmony. There is a natural and mutual feeling between the white and the black there, which must be worn out, just like the feeling between the South and the rest of the Union. If the negro has been unjustly treated, as he has been continually told by the fanatics, he must feel injustice. If the white man has been deprived of what he believed to be his property, he has a consciousness of being the victim of injustice, and the ex-slave is the living reminder of it. No legislation, no reasoning, can efface cither of those feelings. Time will.

What is wanted for the negro, and not a little for his special friends, is the dissemination of the knowledge that the first law of labor is the law of liberty—which means liberty to hire and be hired without congressional interference, and with no more State interference than the enforcement of contracts.

THE Richmond Enquirer speaks as follows of Secretary

The Richmond Enquirer speaks as follows of Secretary STANTON:

Even while sharing with the people of the South the bitterness of feeling toward the Secretary of War, we must bear testimony to his firmness, perhaps stubbornness, to his undagging industry, and to his devoted sentiment of Unionism. An carnest enemy is more admirable than a vacillating and unstable man. Mr. Stanton, during the war, never failed in anything that could contribute to the success of his cause. When defeat overtook his arms, when the public spirit waned under repeated military disaster, and all scemed lost for his cause, neither his resolution nor his courage failed him. One commander after another was dismissed, as one army after another was destroyed. McClellan made way for Pope, who, more unfortunate than his predecessor, paid the same ponalty. Again McClellan was superseded by Burnside, and then Hooker, and then Meade, and then Grant. But amidst all the disasters that caused these frequent changes, the Secretary remained firm and immoveable—determined and unyielding in defeat, he was seldom tried by victory; but in defeat his resolution never to give up the cause was often made apparent. To no one man in the United States army be attributed. Stanton in Washington, co-operating with exhaustion in the South, overthrew the Confederacy, Neither Lincoln, nor Grant, nor Sherman, contributed more to specess than Stanton. STANTON :

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency has been sent to the printer; This will be one of the most important department documents that will be sent to Congress. In treating the question of national banks and currency, he refers to taxes and revenue, which has a bearing on the subject, and in this way will present an array of valuable facts to our law makers, which, if sus tained by proper legislation, will go a great way towards solving the present difficult funncial problem. It is understood that he will urge the removal of the Bureau to New York. Secretary McCultoci will strongly urge contraction of the currency. This, from present ap. earances, will pervade his whole report; but whether he will suggest any feasible plan to accomplish that pur pose remains to be seen. The total receipts from inter nal revenue since the 80th of June amount to $146,

Some time since the Quarternaster's Department directed that the sale of transportation material be discontinued. The Commissary Department has, in effect, adopted the same course in respect to supplies for troops, and has commenced accumulating at New Orleans and other posts convenient to Texas. Inspectors are said to be looking closely into the condition and quantity of transportation and ordnance stores, and directing repairs in all cases where they are needed. Taken in connection with General Grant's proposed visit to Sheridan, these facts show a disposition to keep the Army of the Southwest in condition for active service at a moment's notice.

Ir is stated that the National Treasury has now on hand, in coin, $41,718,000, and in currency $30,162,000. There is at present outstanding $5 545,000 of .ld certificates $25.251,000 of new certificates and $51,000,000 of coin certificates. In the War and Navy Departments there is a reduction in the expenditures of oyer $11,000,000 in November, as compared with those of November, 1864.

OF SHAK PEARE, it is said by Richard Grant White, that he never re-wrote or amended one line of his works; he wrote for money, and got his pay, he ieft his works to take care of themselves. He never wrote anybody a letter, and when he died he left but four signatures behind. There were, probably, he autograph seekers in those days.

CULTURE OF MADDER IN THIS COUNTRY.—The Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington has received a valuable paper, communicated through the State Department by Moris. Emile de Speyer, on the subject of the culture of mediter, which he claims may be successfully raised on the rich soils of this country. It is estimated that the net value of this dye that may be grown on a single acre would be $979. When it is considered that the importation of madder into this country from France amounts to 25,000,000 france annually, if any reasonable approximation to this profit could be realized per acr., our Western agriculturists should lose no time in attempting its culture.
