News Summary.

The Washington correspondent of the Herald report that Lieutenant-General GRANT will leave for the Rio Grande immediately after the holidays, in the flag ship of the Gulf squadron.

The correspondent of the New Orleans Times says that the Liberal General Diaz has been very successful against the Imperialists. The Liberals are masters of the coast between Vera Cruz and Tuspan, also south of Vera Cruz. Marshal Bazaine writes to Mejia that the northern frontier is under the double protection of the Emperor of Mexico and the Emperor of the French. Dispatches from Shreveport to the 8th, report naviga tion suspended on account of low water. Cotton was still sent down, though taken across the country a longt distance to reach navigation.

The work of rebuilding the levees on the Mississippi under military authority, will be commenced at an early day. The effect of this measure, upon the national prosperity and the public credit, by the addition to the treduct of cotton, can hardly be over-estimated.

Late dispatches from Fort Kearney mention that o the morning of the 22d inst., the thermometer stood at twenty-eight degrees below zero. Heavy snow storms achave fallen on the plains late'y. It is drifted in hollows between here and the Missouri River to the depth of hitsen to twenty feet. No coaches have arrived from Atchison for the last few days.

Secretary McOulloca has returned from New York. His interview with moneyed men was entirely satisfactory. The banks offered him a temporary loan of on hundred millions, which he will probably accept. He contemplates funding fifty or a hundred million certifi-in cates of indebtedness in compound interest notes, first series of seven-thirty, which full due next January.

Secretary Stanton has issued an order, setting apart all the ground upon which the massacre of Fort Pillow occurred, for the purpose of erecting a monument thereon to the memory of the soldiers who fell and those who were butchered there. This order was obtained by Mrs. Boors, the widow of the officer who commanded the colored troops there. She is now engaged in raising funds to build the monument.

The New Orleans True Delta, of the 15th, says: "The weepoit and severe change in the weather has, we believe, affected Liquignant General Scorr greatly—so much so, in fact, that he is determined to leave at once. He stated, last evening, that he should this morning leave New Orleans for Key West, and there remain until mild weather again, sets in, when he would return to this city."

We understand that there is soon to take place in New Orleans an impressive Masonic ceremony—the holding of what is called by the fraternity a "Lodge of Sorrow"—the occasion being the commemoration & the members of "the mystic tie" who have died during the war. Upon this interesting occasion ALBERT PIKE who is the Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the southern section of the United States, is to take the leading part, and is to be assisted by other Masons

· Senator Monnill, Chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, is preparing a bill, to be reported from that committee, taking away all the franchises of the district, and vesting its government in a board of commissioners, to be appointed by the Presi-dent. The bill is a device of the weak-kneed Congress-men to dodge the question of negro suffrage in the district, as they hope by taking away the suffrage from evegro suffrage. It will fail, however, as the suffrage bill will be pressed.

The Boston Traveller says that the people in that country in search of them, but that in most cases they were doomed to disappointment. It adds that there are not within a range of twenty miles of Boston more than fifty houses for sale or rent, and to obtain even these it would be necessary to pay a large advance upon former prices. This scarcity will, by the next spring, become so severe as to require the erection of a large number of dwellings even if the present high cost of building should continue to prevail.

Senator Sprague, Chairman of the Committee or Manufactures, in the U. S. Senate, some days ago sent a communication to all the leading manufacturers throughout the country to ascertain their views in regard to the present tariff, and also as to the internal reverse tax on manufactures. Quite a number of responses have been received. They all have one sentiment-that the internal revenue tax is so heavy they are compelled to raise the price of the manufactured article to such an extent that imported articles can be sold cheaper than the domestic article. Therefore they maintain that a higher tariff must be imposed on the foreign article, or the tax reduced on the domestic article. This view of the matter will be laid before Congress by the committee at an early day.

There is no truth in the report that the Southern members elect held a caucus a few days ago, and resolved to go home and remain there until after the 4th of March next. Most of these Southern Congressmen have gone home to spend the holidays, and intend returning in January to prosecute their claims for seats in Congress. From the tone of the leading men in both Houses just before the adjournment, there is reason to helfeve that the Tennessee Senators and Representatives will be admitted to sents before the first of February, and there is good reason to believe that most of the Representatives of the other Southern States will be admitted within a very short time. The opinion is gaining ground that the credentials of the claimants for seats from the Bouthern States should be referred to the Committee on Blechons, and there disposed of without the incum-Danieb and weight of the loads of reconstruction resolu-tions offered.

A BILL FOR THE RELIEF OF THE PROPLE.—We find the following in the report of proceedings of the Tennessee

following in the report of proceedings of the Tennessee Legislature; a few days ago:

Ly Mr. Simmons—Whereas, the General Assembly that the house of the public money, and have also before the subject money, and have also before the house of the public money, and have also before the house of the public money, and have also between the house of the subject which behind that subject the public money. And have the subject that the people of any different reason, that applied the sale of the people mad.

Whereas, there is no good or sufficient reason, that applied the sale of the people mad.

The sale of the people is made of the feeling of the sale of the sale

CHARLESTON.

SATURDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 30, 1865.

GEN. GRANT has told, in his report just published, the story of those campaigns, whose result will justify; in the opinion of the mass of mankind, his appointment to conduct them. The report opens with a survey of the position of the belligerents in April, 1864, when the Federal commander could draw no comfort from his sweeping glance at the military echequier, and concludes with congratulations to the armies, which, in the spring of 1865, shared his surprise at their own gigantic successes. The report will interest our readers, not so much as an orderly and fairly authentic chronicle of the battles of that portentous period, but as a the mind which produced and guided them; of the events recorded, and the importance of and, in this point of view, disappointment will be felt that the veil has been so charily raised from the purposes and expectations with thought to want conciseness; but it will be which he rushed into battle in May, 1864. To the dignity of history the report makes no style which alone could place it on the level claim, and the world must learn the sufferings, the useless heroism, and the sickening despair | Captains whose swords have been as mighty as of that era at some future time, and from their pens. The cordial recognition of the some other hand.

An exhaustive criticism of this report points: the authenticity of its facts, the chareter of the strategy narrated as measured by the principles of military art, and the literary value of the narrative. The time has not yet come to submit, to the test of historic analysis, the facts advanced by Gen. GRANT; the evidence which might contradict or modify them his mention of the "manhood" and "hercuhas not been given to the world; and, until | lean efforts" of his opponents; and the modethe great leaders who opposed him have told their tale, judgment must be suspended on his claims to accuracy. With the lights we have, the merit cannot be denied to General have earned for him an exceptional claim to GRANT of having endeavored to give to the our kindly respect. More he cannot ask world an impartial narrative. He does not attempt to conceal the numerical superiority of his own force, or to exaggerate the losses inflicted upon his opponent. "The resources of the enemy, and his numerical strength," he admits candidly, "were far inferior to ours." On the 3d June he admits a heavy loss on his part, and a comparatively light one on the part of the Confederates; and, in summing up the results of the combats which had taken place between that date and the opening of the campaign, he frankly acknowledges that "previous attacks had not all resulted in victories, or accomplished as much as he had hoped for them." This will be the first intimation to the people of the North that the progress of the Army of the Potomae, from the banks of the Rapidan to those of the James, was not the triumphal march they had been led to believe it. Where inaccuracies occur in the report, it will be but just to remember that a commander-in-chief must rely for the details of battles upon the accounts of subordinates; and no one who has had experience of the difficulty, nay, impossibility, of obtaining a coherent narrative from the immediate actors on the battle-field, will be hasty in charging upon a general an intention to misrepresent. Gen. GRANT, we have no doubt, has been misinformed, when he commits such errors as stating that "his troops were withdrawn" on the 30th July, when, in fact, they were driven out of the lines of Petersburg in headlong rout, by the bayonets of MAHONE; and in relating that, on the 1st April, "Gen. SHERIDAN assaulted and carried a strongly fortified position at Five Forks," when, in fact, there was no work which deserved the name of fortification, and no movement which General SHERIDAN could claim as an assault. There is no problem more difficult than that of determining the relative degrees of influence which fortune and conduct have exercised in the production of given results; and in discussing military affairs especially, the difficulty is increased by the acknowledged fact that war offers unusual opportunities for the intervention of fortune. CICERO advocated in the Roman Senate the appointment of Pompey to command, on the avowed ground that he was the favorite of fortune. "The foremost man of all the world" pauses in the wonderful story of his achievements, to con- COTYON to Columbia, S. C., from all points on the fess to mankind his obligations to fortune, greatly reduced rates, upon the completion of the South Napoleon complained that not his own Carolina Railroad to Columbia, which may be expected genius, but fortune, abandoned him to ruin and despair at Waterloo. The precise obligations which the Lieutenant-General owes to the same fickle divinity, we leave to some future Jonini to determine, but the cotemporary critic will not be charged with unfairness who points to her favors and to the immense power in his hands, as a sufficient explanation of his great successes, without resorting to the hypothesis of his military genius. Fortune showered her smiles "upon his quarry," and the application of the immense resources at his command to the destruction of his exhausted foe was a task as simple as that of driving the car of Juggernaut over its feeble victims, . General GRANT is fully aware of this fact, and confesses freely how little skill was necessary to the accomplishment of his purposes, when he states his plan of campaign to be "to hammer continuously against the armed force of the enemy and his resources, until, by mere attrition, if in no other way, there should be nothing left to him." This is the principle which he has contributed to the science of war, and he deserves the merit of having never lost sight of it for a moment. His manœuvres were a series of display, on a gigantic scale, of brute force; his sword cut by its own weight, and not by the cunning with which he wielded it. He hammered persistently at the Confederate lines, inflicting, by heavy losses, which he could not well afford, smaller losses, which the exhausted Confederacy could not repair; the brilliant combinations, which secure victory before the blow has been struck, were no part of his strategy; and it is well known to our readers that the handful of men who laid down their arms on the fatal morning of the 9th of April, at Appomattox, did so, not because they had been manœuvred into a position which made resistance a military folly, but because they had been reduced to a number which made it a physical impossibility. As an addition to military literature, the report is of that intermediate character which neither deserves praise nor demands evelation of the designs and hopes of censure. When the magnitude and number General Grant's testimony in regard to them, are considered, his narrative will not be impossible to claim for it those merits of with the military compositions of the great services of his subordinates, especially of those of Generals SHERMAN, MEADE and would necessarily be directed to three distinct SHERIDAN, do credit to his heart. But we must complain that many things in the report, and, among others, the strictures upon Bur-LER, however just, are scarcely couched in those grave tones which become the utterances of the historic muse. The people of the South will recognize a friendly spirit in ration displayed in his convention with General LEE, and the fidelity with which his promisos to his fallen enemy were carried out, from the Southern people, who, with one heart, have awarded the hero's crown to another, and who abide with confidence the confirmation which they expect present and future generations to give to their verdict.
