The stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, would be provided with the necessary costumes and outfit temporarily by the managers of the Tabernacle, free. To this advertisement there were fifty answers, and it was necessary to select one couple. The happy twin who drew the lucky number were James Willets and Minnie Willets, of Stamford, Connecticut, who held the relation of cousins.

Costumes supposed to represent the New England fashion of one hundred years ago were loaned for the occasion by a masked ball cotillion, and an immense assemblage gathered to witness the ceremonies. The price of admission was fixed at fifty cents, and the proceeds of the entertainment were devoted to purchasing the bride's presents.

Up the main aisle proceeded a heterogeneous procession of about thirty persons clad in ancient costumes. First came the bridegroom, a country lad of twenty years, in a blue velvet coat trimmed with silver binding, and a white satin vest edged with gold buttons, and white silk stockings. Then came the bride in a pearl satin dress, looped up with ornaments; a point lace veil covered her lovely shoulders, and her dark brown hair was powdered to the consistency of the summit of Mont Blanc on a wintry day.

The ceremony was then performed, and the two were pronounced man and wife by the Rev. Dewitt Talmage.

The public sale of the Charleston Courier, yesterday, resulted in its purchase by the proprietors of THE NEWS.

This, of course, will necessitate some change in the management of the combined journal; and we shall take the earliest possible opportunity of advising the public of what shall be the course of a liberal and progressive newspaper which will then represent both the hoary age and the lusty vigor of the new South Carolina to which, through good and evil report, we are bound forever.

Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars for a Vote.

The friends of women have sounded another blast. This time the blast comes from New York State, which proposes, in dead earnest, to grant the suffrage to women who hold property to the amount of $250.

The price of Liberty is no longer Eternal Vigilance, but two hundred and fifty dollars. Dirt cheap! The right to do wrong is within the reach of all. And women are natural hoarders. They begin, as big-eyed babies, with secreted cakes and dolls, and end, perhaps, by allowing themselves a "commission" upon the money which Adolphe gives them for marketing. Innocent deception! Adolphe is saved from dypessia; Fifine fills her purse and is happy.

Frugality deserves encouragement, and what reward of merit is more desirable than the power of joining in the noise and turmoil of a contested election? At a price of two hundred and fifty dollars, woman suffrage will find strenuous advocates. The office-seekers, with an eye to potential votes, will show an edifying anxiety to bestow a small testimonial on destitute, if saving, female relations. And who shall say that the bifurcated patriots who advocate the two hundred and fifty dollar vote will not, one day, be rewarded for their trouble, as have been the other ingenious spirits, whose inventions come back to plague them. How would an average citizen feel, for instance, if his sister, wife or sweetheart, upon whom he had bestowed the necessary property qualification, proved her womanly gratitude by casting her vote for his deadly foe, whether the horrid Jack Slumkins or treacherous Cousin Charles?
