Bresention of Richmond. Bave for the debilitating moral effects of this evacuation, the loss of Richmond to the cause of the Confederacy is a very small matter. It should have been abandored long ago, and as soon as it was found that the policy of the edemy made them resolutely ait down before it with a force which, if insufficient for its coptume by sems, was yet sufficient to paralyze the activity of Lee and this army in all other quarters and this only for the retention of a region stripped of food, which we could only supply from a distance and at great expense and delay; and where an open, ample and spacious water bere was afforded to the enemy, leaving ben free to a descent at any neexpected mo ment. A wome situation for our armies could not well be found and it should have been abandoned twelve Souths age. Beyond the capture of the Confederate capital, Eastern Virginia held forth no temptations to the enemy, in desolated fields and plandered dwellings. It certainly held forth no sufficient motive to us for its retention, when the country had to sup ply its army and people at such a great dis tance and ever such an expensive tract of rail way. The removal of Johnston and the desire to hold Richmond, beyond all necessity and reason, have subjected the States of Georgia and South and North Carolina to the terfible ordeal of fire through which they have already partly passed. Had the Government removed to Columbia when it removed the Treasury De partment hither; avacuated Richmond then; selieved Lee's army of the necessity of that patient dog watch which they have been so long keepingsap for the protection of a preeinet which was utterly useless for all military purposes, and only to be regarded for its prestige as a capital and in the eyes of European States; Sherman would never have been able toake a triumphant progress from Atlanta, sis Savannah, through South and North Caro ling to his shipping at Wilmington-if, indeed, has enceeded in getting there, as reported. Prieffy, however, we attach no military or realegatical importance to the events which have led to the evacuation of Richmond or to Attr loss of that position. Politically, the effect ne he anje ous e our sausé abrond; and se cially and morally, at bome, it will cause any number of laguarious aspects among thousands who would be equally afflicted, if told that we had lost our cities of Kamschatka and Timbuctoo. What next move is to follow on our military chess-board, we will not undertake to divine. We may add, that our telegraphic advices lack too much in perspicuity and fullness to satisfy any thinking party. We must wait on what to-morrow shall bring forth.

President Davis takes a right view of the results of the evacuation of Richmond. We have said eisewhere, that, in our opinion, it should have been evacuated long ago, and that we should not have waited till this became a military necessity. The cheerful tone of President Davis is highly becoming; of course, he can deal only in generalities, and these must suffice; of the future modus operandi he should say nothing, and we certainly have nothing to say. But so long as the armies of Lee, Johnston and others are intact, they will speak, and we trust to the purpose. God still rules in heaven.
