

MISCELLANY

Friendship.
Time spent with you is surely pleasant,
The moments fly so fast;
The future ones are quickly present,
The present soon are past.
Time always moves with tardy measure,
When hearts are ill at ease;
But friendship yields such real pleasure,
The flight of time none sees.
As moments spent with friends are sweet,
We wish they long would stay;
But, then, they always seem to fly,
And sooner pass away.
Thus, by your friendly conversation,
I find myself bereaved,
Of time, which then, to my vexation,
Had passed quite unperceived.

MARSHAL DE CLAUSEL.—The New Orleans Picayune, in giving some excellent advice to those young soldiers who have not yet found employment, relates the following interesting incident in the history of Marshal de Clausel:

Let our young soldiers remember and profit by the example of the old French soldiers, many of them officers who had won distinction in the big wars in Europe, who, in their exile in this country, cheerfully adopted any pursuit by which they could make an honest livelihood. Anything in preference to loafing, vagabondism, and humiliating dependence. Many of the old citizens of Mobile will remember an elderly Frenchman, who, some thirty-five years ago, used to be seen every morning in the market, with his ear of fish and vegetables, selling by retail those products of his own industry and skill. His manners and appearance betrayed a previous life and experience in some higher or very different sphere from that in which he then moved. But the old man was contented, cheerful and vivacious, and he thrived and was happy.

That man was one of the most distinguished of Napoleon's surviving Marshals. A few years afterward, on the establishment of Louis Philippe on the throne of France, he was restored to his position in the French army, and the Mobile vegetable and fish vender became the first Military Governor of Algeria. Such is the story of Marshal de Clausel, and it is the story of many other distinguished officers of the great army of Napoleon.

Our young soldiers must study and imitate this philosophy and noble self-command, which are such admirable characteristics of Frenchmen.

It has just been discovered that a woman was forty years an officer in the British service, and fought one duel and sought many more, and procured a legitimate education; had received a regular diploma, and had acquired almost a celebrity for skill as a surgical operator.

TEDIOUS OPERATION.—Two damsels, a day or two since, were having an animated discussion on the subject of coiffure, and one exclaimed, "What do you think, Marie? It took me thirty-five minutes this morning to make my water-fall!"—Boston Post.
