Manifest Destiny.

The waters of American enterprise and energy seem to be overflowing everywhere. While the boundaries of the "great West" still remain unattained, and the stream of population still sees in that direction, new and ettreative fields a direction, new and attractive fields are being opened and attractive fields are being opened for our daring and adventurous people. Mexico and Brazilhave both thrown their gates wide open, and are inviting and welcoming American emigrants with every demonstration of hospitality. Never before did the old and popular doctrine of "Manifest Destiny" seem so likely of fulfillment as it does now with this universal as it does now, with this universal extension of Americans and their ideas all over this continent. Wherever the American goes and settles, like "ill weeds" he "grows apace," and soon roots out all other weeds of the country.

Who believes that the element of American population now seeking Mexico and Brazil, does so from any special love and admiration of impe-rial governments and institutions, or hat governments and institutions, or that it will long be content to occupy a subordinate position in the land of its adoption? The only question is one of time and numbers, and, sooner or later, the two countries now in process of Americanization will feel the controlling influence of Anglo-Saxon presence. It matters not whether the emigrants be discontanted. ther the emigrants be discontented Confederates or shrewd Down Easters, or both combined, the result must be the same. Whether in contact with the good-natured and affable Portuguese of Brazil, or the obtuse and stolid Mexican, the American Jement will predominate, and, peaccably or violently, will ultimately assert its superiority in mind and matter. Let him who doubts the truth of this proposition regard the examples of its correctness, presented in the cases of Louisiana, Florida, Texas and California, where the traces of the original foreign population have almost nal foreign population have almost been destroyed by absorption. This ascendancy is not necessarily preceded or attended by revolutionary distur-bances of the State. It may be, and is the consequence of that gradual and almost imperceptible supplanting of all the old materials of the country by the new, first in the spheres of the arts and sciences, and finally in those arts and sciences, and finally in those of morals, government and religion.

The new race engrafts itself upon the commerce, industry and institutions of the country, and its superiority being tacitly conceded, the consequences which logically result therefrom are peaceably accepted, from a consciousness of the benefits likely to consciousness of the benefits likely to accrue to individuals and the State by the adoption of such a course. In the meantime, the power of language is exercised as an efficient auxiliary in the progressive revolution. The language of the country; and when the language of a people decays, they begin to lose their identity. Thus, in the manner and by the means which we have described, all the countries on this continent, to which any large or considerable stream of emigration from the United States may be directed, will, in course States may be directed, will, in course of time, become Americanized, and that fact accomplished, they will knock at the door of the American Union for admission. But in Brazil and Mexico, before the step last indicated can be taken, the imperial Governments now existing there will in vernments now existing there will in some way have to be superceded. How that is to be done, we will not at present explain, but will leave to Yankee ingenuity to discover.
