The Fashions.

The first snow has fallen, and is already gone; but it lasted long enough to make us feel that winter is fairly inaugurated; and we turn with renewed interest to the record of winter fashions.

For paletots, which are to be worn when a dressy toilette is required, a new sort of plush, called sable d'or, is likely to be very popular. It is well named, because the ground-work of this material appears to be golden sand.

Sleeves will be worn, plain coat, tight coat and slashed, with little trimming. In bonnets something very new and beautiful has been introduced; the shape is called the Margaret of Navarre, and consists of a small flat crown, with a narrow curtain, and, in front, a small point, turning back a la Marie Stuart, and forming a sort of combination of the Empire and Queen of Scots bonnets.

Short black velvet jackets, trimmed with straps of colored velvet, and large false pockets in front, are worn by growing girls, who are young enough to sport hats in preference to bonnets.

What will be the shape of the winter bodice? is the question, with regard to dresses, which is just now agitating the bosoms alike of dress-makers and dress-wearers; and after that, the not less important query, What will be the style of sleeves worn this season?

To answer the first question, the latest advices from Paris inform us that, without exception, every bodice that is made will be worn with a waist band. The bodice may be made basquine-shaped, but must have a belt at the waist; it may be made round, or simply a "French waist," which renders a belt imperative; or it may be made en Gabrielle, and worn with a waist band.

idered with silver; the youthful bride wore with this dress magnificent family diamonds, mounted in silver.
