Selected Poetry.

A COUNTRY HOME. I do not ask that city spires May round my mansion rise,

But that my home may be where trees Are pointing to the skies, Where flows the silvery mountain rill With sweet and merry sound, And the echo of the hunter's gun Shall through the woods rebound.

I cannot love the city pomp, Its fashion and its pride; I had rather dwell in an humble cot Upon the mountain side. Where sweetly blooms the shady tree, The tulip and the rose,

. The early violet grows. I would not give my quiet home, Its happiness and health,

And where, beside the rivulet,

For all the city palaces, Its pleasures and its wealth. I love to breathe the mountain air. And roam where all is free, Let others choose a city life, But a country life for me.

From the Charleston Mercury. Agricultural Science.

We, the people, are accustomed to look to public journals for information and instruc-They are the guides of the community. d leaders in directing every purpose which intended to promote the welfare and advanceent of the State. I therefore call your ation to a question which intelligent men are continually asking, and to which hitherto there ms to have been no adequate answer. Why s at that South Carolina does so little for the griculture of the State? Why is it that she arefully and munificently fosters every kind of istruction, except that which is so essential to her prosperity? She is emphatically an Agricultural State. Agriculture is the business of he highest and humblest of her citizens. Why ias she no Professorship of Agriculture within

The State College does her honor, and has conferred advantages of exceeding great value. But while she cultivates the minds of her youth inclassical learning, general literature, rhetoric. logic, and mathematical science, she gives them no lesson on the principles and practice of the most important of all sciences. Among the common places with which political writers, and stump orators, are used to tickle the ears of the plain, honest, but unlearned farming class, one is to assure them of the honor and lignity that belong to the man who succeeds in making two blades of grass grow where one grew before. And what is the consequence of this flourish when the speaker takes his seat in the Legislature? Is it to use the necessary means for teaching his constituents how to perform this exploit which he has so loudly eulogised? Not at all. He will lend his aid to make our young men lawyers, or doctors, or preachers. He will establish military schools to teach our lads the mysteries of the drill, how to march and countermarch, and handle their muskets with adequate skill; but he gives no thought to the poor farmer's necessities and rights. He never once thinks of these blades of grass that make so pleasant a picture in his exercise of rhetorical talents. They have withered away, and, having served the purpose of tickling the ears of the groundings, are abandoned and forgotton. Now, of the youth of the State, how many are intended to become professional men? Not one in one hundred. How often will an occasion arise for the application of that military science which is taught at the expense of the farmers? Not once, probably, in a lifetime. When, and by whom is agricultural knowledge required? By the whole people-by rich and poor, high and humble, educated and ignorant. And yet the care and wealth of the State is exclusively devoted to the cultivation of the few, and to a preparation for the rare occasions that may happen but once in an age.

It may be said that the instruction imparted at College is intended for the general improvement of the mind-to make our youth accomplished scholars-to embelish their minds with the charms of literature and learning - and not for mere professional preparation. But even in that point of view, the advantages accrue to a very small number only. Of the young men who go to College, the proportion is very minute that is able to acquire the tastes and knowledge of a cultivated mind. The mass of even College lads fall back, on leaving College, into the ordinary pursu'ts of life. When their education is completed there, they begin to learn the first principles of what is to be their constant occupation. They are sons, for the most, of planters. They have been trained in Grammar Schools, Academies, and at College. They return home, when graduated to cultivate their farms. Not one in ten has the slightest knowledge of his business. They do not know the trees and shrubs on their plantations, the nature of their soils, the qualities of their manures, the habits of the insects that destroy their crops. Their practice is all em pirical. They learn by successive losses. If they succeed at all it is by the sacrifice of many harvests.

But the danger is that they may never succeed at all. Our mode of education not only does not fit our young men for the business of their lives, but it really unfits them for it. Not merely the knowledge, but the taste for the occupation of a farmer is to be acquired in early life. The College withdraws the young student from the country. He acquires habits and tastes at variance with its pursuits, labors, and even enjoyment. I say nothing of the vices incidental to College education, and which arise chiefly from the circumstances that most students have no calling whatever for literary pursuits. They are therefore idlers, and, like all idlers, have a proclivity to evil practices. But, independent of this, the College life has nothing in it of rural life. Nothing connects it with the country. It is sedentary not active; a life of gossipping and light reading, and segars and merchaums, not of attention or labor. It is saited admirably to make its parlabor. It is saited admirably to make its partakers dawdle and saunter through life. For tooth is black. She formerly belonged to the estate tions, and constitute the true dignity of the hu man race. But highly as I value Homer and Virgil, they are for the few, not for the many. Even for one who can appreciate them. I desire something more, if he is to farm his own land. If he understands and admires Virgii's elaborate description of the plough never so well, I would still wish him to have some practical knowledge of the use of it. While he delights in the poet's praises of a country life, it is of the greatest importance that he should acquire a taste for its occupations. Even for such a man agricultural education is essential. His teaching is incomplete if, intending to be a farmer, he begins his work knowing nothing of farming. AGRICOLA.

TRICOPHEROUS, OR Medicated Compound, for preserving, fastening, softening and promoting the growth of the hair, cleansing the head, and curing diseases of the skin, and external cuts, bruises, &c. The common consent of all who have used Barry's Tricopherous, whether for the improvement and invigoration of the hair, or for eruptions, cuts, bruises, &c., places it at the head of all preparations intended for like purposes. This is no ill considered assertion. Figures and facts bear it out. The sales average a millions of bottles a year: the receipts, in cash, $100,000. This year the business will exceed that amount. The number of orders which daily arrive at the depot and manufactory, 137 Broadway, New York, addressed to Professor Barry, enclosing cash, and requiring immediate attention, would scarcely be believed. The wholesale demand is from 2,000 to 3.000 bottles a day, probably exceeding that of all the other hair preparations conjoined. The popularity of the article everywhere, and the liberal terms to deavers, combine to increase its sales with great rapidity; and improvements in its compo-sition, made at considerable expense, adds to its reputation as well as its intrinsic value.
