

THE HYPOCRISY.

EVERY MAN who lives in a house, especially if the house be his own, should oil all the various parts of it once in two or three months. The house will last much longer and will be much more quiet to live in. Oil the locks, bolts and hinges of the street door, and it will shut gently with luxurious ease, and with the use of a little amount of force. A neglected lock requires great violence to cause it to shut, and with so much violence that the whole house, its doors, its windows, its very floors and joists, are much shaken, and in time they get out of repair in all sorts of ways, to say nothing of the dust that is displaced every time the door is so shaken. The incessant banging of doors, scraping of locks, creaking and squeaking of hinges, is a great discomfort. Even the bell-wire cracks some times, and they will not be broken until they are so tight that they will be dangerous of breaking any part of them. The casters of tables and chairs should be sometimes oiled, and they will move with such gentle impulse and so quietly that a sleeping child or an old man is not awakened. A well-oiled door-lock opens and shuts with hardly a whisper. Three penny-worths of oil used in a large house once a year will save many shillings in locks and other material, and in the end will save many pounds in even the substantial repairs of a house; and an old wife living and sleeping in quite repose will enjoy many more years of even temper and active usefulness. Housekeepers, pray do not forget oil. A stich in time saves nine, and a drop in time saves pounds. —The Builder.

Hypocrisy.
Hypocrisy is very funny. It walks into the church of a Sunday morning, sleek, cleaned shaved, and as smiling as a man with a new wife for the third time. It joins in the anthem, responds to the prayers, listens attentively to the sermons and deacons. It is as free with the women as rouge or prepared chalk, and talks to young girls with the greatest of freedom. The missionary cause is its special care; all the neighbors are drummed up to "come forward and aid a benevolent object." Some subscribe large sums, and others throw in small amounts—the large contributors get their names into the papers, while the small ones are content with having done their duty. The same hypocrisy we have seen severely prayerful of a Sunday, and on Monday it bartered a pair of gaiters with a courtesan. It has been known to turn up its eyes with horror at an oath, and before fairly recovered from the shock to swindle a laboring man out of money which should buy his children bread. It is prevalent in some cheap groceries, in the shape of short weights; is exhibited in wet goods; predominates in coffee; is powerful in mild; and—it's everywhere. Wherever you meet the fellow, shake him off, eschew his acquaintance—don't let your wife know there is such a character. Better be a Mormon a thing-a-may, a street contractor, or ex-treasurer, than hypocrite. It's hazardous ballast, if you paddle your own canoe.

Marriage.
MARRIAGE should be emblematic of the union of mind, and heart to heart. It is well to build matrimonial happiness on physical sympathy of heart responding to heart; but the mental adaptation, and a similarity of views relative to the grand principle of action and events of society, should also be taken into consideration; for the bodily perfection must fade, the ardor of affection may cool or be diverted into another channel, but the minds fixity of purpose is more to be depended upon, its energies diminishing but slowly with increasing years. A marriage founded upon its mutual understanding has but little chance of being wrecked. Both parties finding the self-same mental beauty they once admired, and constantly deriving from each other benefit of mutual interchange of thought, they live together as monitors; their two beings have become insidiously chained by habit, and they really form but one person, though having, it is true, a masculine and feminine side.

Rather Jolly.
Aldermen, in New Orleans, are sometimes like Aldermen in other places—further north—nearer home—fond of the article that Father Mathew and the temperance people generally are opposed to. When the riot in the Crescent City, the other day, was at its height (one of the papers there tells us) one of the Fathers was sought for at a somewhat late hour of the night, for the purpose of obtaining an order relative to the riot, and was found two thirds drunk. In that happy state of consciousness the imminency of the danger was strongly represented to him, and his exertions were requested for the suppression of difficulties. The old gentleman bloomed out like a mammoth cactus, and informed the solicitor that there was no difficulty, only every one go to bed and nobody would be killed; he had examined carefully; and he had drank rotgut with both parties, and peaceable citizens and b-b-b-better gentlemen couldn't be found. The shouting was only for fun. If anybody attacks you, ask them to drink and it'll be all settled. Try it—I did. And from his appearance we should think he had—and found it exceedingly satisfactory—on himself.

The most agreeable companion is a simple, frank man, without any high pretensions to an oppressive greatness, one who loves life, and understands the use of it; obliging alike at all hours; above all, of a golden temper, and steadfast as an anchor. For such a one we would gladly exchange the greatest genius the most brilliant wit, the profoundest thinker.

One evening, I went upon my bed, engaged in pursuing my studies, when my mind was withdrawn from an intensely interesting passage by the conversation of two boys, aged five years, who with the injunction to "go to sleep," had been put in a "trundle" in the room I occupied. The boys were cousins. One had been born at the South, but came North to spend the summer. He I shall call Arthur, the other John—out of respect to their parents, who are still living. "Do you know, Arthur, that if you tell a lie, God will strike you dead?" "No; will He?" inquired Arthur. "Yes, to be sure," says John. "What I done dead?" interrogated Arthur. "Yes," persisted John. "Will he do it before my mother comes?" inquired Arthur anxiously. "Well, I don't know as to that, answered John, who evidently felt disposed to be as lenient as such an aggravated case would admit of; but I think you had better send for her!" —Dodge's Literary Museum.

A young gentleman was one day arranging music for a young lady to whom he was paying his addresses. "Pray, Miss D.," said he, "what time do you prefer?" "O," she replied carelessly, "any time will do—the quicker the better."

"My love," said Boyle to his wife, why is a Laplander like an umbrella maker? I give it up! 'Cause he derives his support from the reindeer! 'Try another,' said our chief, as he threw himself on the sofa on Saturday night, 'why is your tired husband like an umbrella?' 'Because he protects me from the elements, my love.' 'Not a bit of it, darling, but because he is used by it.'

The following memorandum was written on the envelope of a package of Weekly True Deltas, returned to us yesterday by a postmaster in Mississippi: "Mr. W.—is dead and his wife is drunk; the estate is insolvent, and nobody calls for the paper. You had better stop it."

We have stopped that paper.—N. O. True Delta.

OLD GENT.—Why don't you go to work, and stop picking your nose?
Boy.—It's my nose ain't it? and it's Fourth of July, too. I'll pick thunder out of it, if I've a mind to!
