A great expedition is preparing in Spain for America. Seamen are impressed to man the fleet.

Yesterday afternoon the duke of Wellington arrived at his Hotel Rue des Champs Elysees.

It is said the expedition fitting out by the Porte will not make any effort to support the Barbary powers.

Miniature Portrait of England, in 1816. BY COLEMAN.

"The whole of the real property of the country is taxed to the full amount of the rent, the farmer pays to the government more than he pays to the landlord, the poor rates amount to eight millions of pounds sterling a year; every fifth man is a pauper or a beggar; it is necessary to keep up in time of peace a regular army of 150 thousand men, soldiers are openly allowed to be employed, in a considerable part of the Kingdom, to collect the taxes, and make the people pay their tythes; misery prevails to such a degree, that the occupiers of the land decamp, leaving whole parishes in a wild state, and the poor to seek food how they can; the rich flee to the continent of Europe in order to avoid paying such heavy taxes; it is proposed in parliament to pass a law to compel them to remain at home; thousands upon thousands of the hardy and enterprising go to America to better their lot; the jails are filled with debtors, lately persons of great respectability and of competence."

The Earthquake at Martinique.—A letter from Martinique, dated the 15th Aug. says:—This morning, soon after 3 o'clock, there was a severe shock—the second immediately following the first, and much the severest. Although no injury was done in town; I doubt if the houses would have stood a third as severe as the second was. The weather had been heavy, dull and hazy, the day previous and in the evening. Soon after the shock there fell some rain, accompanied with a fresh breeze. From the rocking of my house, I judge it to have passed from the south east to north west. Nat. Adv.

POETRY.

The following lines, so descriptive of the influence of money, is supposed to be the production of the Scottish bard Mr. Burns, on the back of a bankbill. From Poulsons Daily Advertiser. Was worth, thy power, thou cursed leaf, Fell source of a' my woe and grief; For lack of thee I lost my lass, For lack of thee I stint my glass. I've seen the children of affliction, Unaided through thy cursed restriction; I've seen the oppressors cruel smile, Amid his hapless victim's spoil, Who for thy potency vainly lust, To crush the monster in the dust. I've seen the man of modest worth, Who could not boast of blood or birth, Beneath his meek, submissive head, Beneath the yoke thou, tyrant, spread. For lack of thee I leave my much lov'd shore, Never, perhaps, to see old Scotland more. Mysterious leaf! thy magic power supplies The needful aid, which nature oft denies; Brains art thou to the brainless—to the blockhead sense; Few, great or good, with thee will take offence— Thou lift's the beggar from his mudwall'd cot, Or sinks the wise man to a drunken sot. More suitors wait upon thy smile Than on the fair of Britain's Isle; More captives sit beneath thy feet Than e'er did monarchs triumph greet; More slaves throng round thy gilded car Than round the altar, bench, or bar; More victims crouch beneath thy power Than ever shrank from storm or shower. Frail, fragile leaf! thy power will soon be o'er, A breath, a blaze, and thou art seen no more.

The following typographical error was overlooked, in consequence of the absence of the editor, viz Anon, instead of the latin word Amor.

The Patriots are said to be on the high road to independence, but reports are so fluctuating and unsteady, that we decline troubling our readers with unsatisfactory extracts.

Lord Exmouth is said to have arrived in the Mediterranean, and still evinces a determination to chastise the barbarians.—Whether the storm may lift itself into the heavens and pass over the strong battlements of Tripoli, it is impossible to decide. His Lordship, it is more than probable will compassionate an old friend, and require nothing further than a recognition of those laws which govern the civilized world.

Christophe, King of Hayti.

The following interesting particulars respecting this extraordinary character, are supplied by a gentleman who was in St. Domingo last June.

His person is the elegant model of an Hercules. In battle he is brave to desperation; his courage rising with danger.—He has been seen in the heat of an engagement, animated with the fury of a tyger, raging and foaming through all his ranks. He is revengeful beyond measure. He had a regiment commanded by a coloured man which went over to Petion. The moment he was apprised of the circumstance, he ordered a massacre of all the coloured women in his dominions, and not even to waste powder on them. I was shewn several places where numbers of those unfortunate females, were butchered: and many were hid there by relatives till the fury abated, and I had the particulars of their escape from the lips of two or three. They still live in great dread; and some, who are even wealthy, would gladly abandon all and go any where to get out of his power, whom they hate, but never name. He is extravagant in his notions of grandeur, and proud as Lucifer himself; severe as a tyrant towards those of his own color, and who are his own subjects, at the same time, rigidly enforcing the laws, and protecting strangers who respect them. In no country in Europe are duties and customs so rigidly exacted, or illicit trade so completely prevented. Add to this, that I travelled in the interior of the country, where not a white face is to be seen, with as much security as I could have done in any part of Great-Britain. This is not to be done without a passport signed by himself. No stranger is permitted to go a hundred yards beyond the barriers of the cape without permission. I do not think, however, that his government will be of long duration. He is so much the tyrant, that he must have many enemies among his seeming friends: besides being himself a usurper and engrossing all the funds of the country, and applying them often foolishly and without advice, will naturally inspire those about him with notions dangerous to his safety. His personal character is so well known, that none will attempt any thing against him till they are sure to have him. At all events, I conceive that Petion must eventually overcome him. His character is so opposite to Christophe's in all that is good, that his success will save the country.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We are induced to call upon you for a compliance with the terms of this Gazette, for the purpose of enabling us to meet such engagements as we have made, in bespeaking the materials for enlarging and improving our paper. Your liberality precludes the necessity of appealing to you for a generous support, and it is our intention (as soon as our subscription list is enlarged sufficiently to authorize the expenditure) to render you satisfactory compensation, by complying with our promises. The facility which the Gazette has given to the circulation of news, and information of a local character, must be highly gratifying to those who were so situated as not to be able to procure intelligence, of a political nature, in any other manner, than by verbal communication. Should the liberality of our country friends be such as we expect, a private mail will be established immediately, calculated to give a still greater facility to the circulation of news.

The terms which we have substituted, for those of the first six months, are such, as will be attended with much less trouble to both parties, and will, it is presumed meet with general approbation.
