THE WALTZER.

If sweet Woman was deck'd with the graces of heav'n To display their full lustre in man's kindling view; To move in the dance if that bright form was given, Then I yield up my heart, pretty Waltzer to you.

If sweet Woman was form'd for the tumult of pleasure— If a tear must ne'er visit those bright eyes of blue; Then, follow, thou fair one, the rapturous measure, For I've given up my heart, pretty Waltzer to you.

But if Woman was deck'd with the graces of heav'n To conceal their full lustre from man's blushing view; If a temple for virtue that bright form was given, Then I yield not my heart, pretty Waltzer to you.

But if Woman was form'd for a tenderet pleasure— If a tear would adorn those two bright eyes of blue; Then follow, thou fair one, the rapturous measure, But I give not my heart, pretty Waltzer to you.

From a Cork Paper, Sept. 27.

Roscommon Assizes.—Connaghan vs Dillon.

SEDUCTION—The following is a correct report of the admirable speech delivered by Mr. Phillips on this occasion:

In this case I am one of the counsel for the plaintiff, who has directed me to explain to you the wrongs for which, at your hands, he solicits reparation. It appears to me a case which merits much consideration, as well from the novelty of its appearance amongst us, as from the circumstances by which it is attended. Nor am I ashamed to say, that in my mind, not the least interesting of those circumstances is the poverty of the man who has made this appeal to me—few are the consolations which soothe; hard must be the heart which does not feel for him. He is, gentlemen, a man of lowly birth and humble station—with little wealth, but from the labour of his hands—with no rank but the integrity of his character—with no recreation but in the circle of his home—and with no ambition but, when his days are full, to leave that little circle the inheritance of an honest name, and the treasure of a good man's memory.—Far inferior, indeed, is he in this respect to his fortunate antagonist. He on the contrary, is amply either blessed or cursed with those qualifications which enable man to adorn or disgrace the society in which he lives—He is, I understand, the representative of an honorable name—the relative of a distinguished family—the supposed heir to their virtues, the indisputable inheritor of their riches. He has been for many years a resident of your country, and has had the advantages of collecting round him all those recollections, which, springing from the scenes of school boy association, or from the more matured enjoyment of the man, crowd as it were unconsciously to the heart, and clings with a venial partiality to the companion and the friend. So impressed, in truth, has he been with those advantages, that, surpassing the usual expenses of a trial, he has selected a tribunal where he vainly hopes such considerations will have weight, and where he well knows my client's humble rank can have no claim, but that to which his miseries may entitle him. I am sure, however, he has wretchedly miscalculated. I know none of you personally, but I have no doubt I am addressing men who will not prostrate their conscience before privilege or power—who will remember that there is a nobility above birth, and a wealth beyond riches; who will feel that as in the eye of that God to whose aid they have appealed, there is not the minutest difference between the rag and the robe—so in the contemplation of that law which constitutes our boast, guilt can have no protection or innocence no tyrant—men who will have pride in proving, that the noblest adage of our noble constitution is not an illusive shadow—and that the peasant's cottage, roofed by straw and tenanted by poverty, stands as inviolated from all invasion as the mansion of the Monarch.
