Happy prevention of premature interment.
The late Sir Hugh Acland, of Devonshire, apparently died of fever, and was laid out as dead.—The nurse with two of the footmen, sat up with the corpse, and, the weather being at the time extremely cold, Lady Acland sent them a bottle of brandy to drink in the night. One of the servants told the other, that "the old boy their master dearly loved a little brandy when he was alive, and he was resolved that he should take one glass now he was dead." The fellow accordingly poured out a bumper, and forced down his throat. A gagging immediately ensued, and a violent motion of the neck and upper part of the breast. The other footman and the nurse were so terrified, that they ran down stairs, and the brandy genius, hastening away with rather too much speed, tumbled down head foremost. The noise of the fall and his cries alarmed a young gentleman who slept in the house that night: who got up, and went immediately to the room where the supposed corpse lay, and, to his great astonishment, saw Sir Hugh sitting upright.—He called the servants. Sir Hugh was put into a warm bed, and the physician and apothecary sent for. These gentlemen in a few weeks perfectly restored their patient to health, and he lived several years afterwards. The Baronet often told the story, and when he really died, left the brandy footman a handsome annuity.
