The Panic Passing Away. Some of the Causes Which Produced It, and the Duties That Will Follow It. The best simile we can find to describe the week of panic in Wall street, says a New York paper, is that of a simple conflagration. Indeed, it would be almost as easy to make a map of the burned district as it was of Chicago or Boston or Baltimore. A few streets in the neighborhood of Wall and Broad included all that there was of real financial danger or actual financial disaster. A few daring and speculative brokers, and fewer unsound banks and trust companies, yielded to the flames for which they had provided the combustibles, but beyond these no business interest suffered, and trade generally was unaffected. Even the failure of Henry Clews & Co., and Howes & Macy, added little to the excitement, and it seemed apparent on every hand that the panic was slowly dying away. In the end it will scarcely be regarded as a disaster-certainly not a national disaster. The great lesson of the panic is, that while it caused fear and alarm almost everywhere, it was in reality confined to those who created it, and it is apparent at last that Wall street may convulsed to its very foundations without involving anything beyond it. Hereafter the bulls and bears of the street may tear each other to pieces, threaten." and they will only be regarded by solid business men as so many marionettes # playing their puppet parts for the amusement of people who delight in witnessing the curious effects produced by cleverly managed machinery. The panic came almost without forewarning, but it was the result of causes long in active operation. The war had left us a legacy of shams and false growths. Though it is more than eight years since, we were not yet free from the fatal poison of war speculations and the loose notions of business and business integrity with which the people were innoculated. And other things grew out of the war equally hurtful with this constitutional disease. It gave us an inflated currency, which enticed men into speculations, certain at some time to create a stringency for them. Overtrading, consequent upon the war spirit of speculation, depleted the country of its gold and made a return

Preparing Rennets.

The best way for preparing rennets is to steep in whey. The whey should be raised to the boiling heat, when the albuminous matter will rise, and may be skimmed off. Whey, when petrified, will in a short time develop acidity; and then is regarded as altogether the best liquid for steeping rennet that has yet been discovered. The whey should not be allowed to get sour and decomposed before heating and skimming. but should be taken sweet from the curds, and purified as above described. Natural Decay --- Protect the System.

The human body is a machine, and therefore can not endure forever; but, like a watch or a sewing machine, it will last much longer if properly regulated and duly repaired, than if no pains were taken to keep it in order. The great object of every one who desires a long and healthy life should be to put his body in a condition to resist the lifethreatening influences by which we are all more or less surrounded; and no invigorant or corrective at present known so effectively answers this purpose as the vitalizing elixir which, under the unpretending name of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, has been for more than twenty years the standard tonic of America. In crowded cities, where the atmosphere is contaminated with the effluvia inseparable from large populations; in marshy regions, where the seggy soil reeks with miasma; on the prairies and in the forests, where every fall the air is tainted with exhalations from rotting weeds and grasses, or decomposing leaves-in short, in every locality where malaria exists, this powerful vegetable antidote is urgently needed. Fever and ague, bilious fevers, dysentery, conjestion of the liver, jaundice, rheumatism, and al diseases which are generated by infected air, impure water, or sudden changes of temperatures may be averted by strengthening the system in advance with Hostetter's Bitters. Autumn is al-""y a season of peril, especially to weak, suscept-ible organizations. Even the more vigorous are apt to be in some measure depressed by the humid atmosphere, loaded with deleterious gases pro-duced by vegetable decay. The fall is a period of the year when the renovation and regulation of the living machine is peculiarly important, and the Bitters should therefore be taken daily at this critical season. ways a season of peril, especially to weak, suscept-
