

From the Watchmen of the South. RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

The opinion commonly entertained, that the most serious sinners are the subjects of the most poignant convictions of sin, and the most alarming terrors of hell, is not correct. In regard to such the commencement of the work of grace is sometimes very gradual, and the impressions are apparently slight, that they afford very little ground of sanguine expectations of the result.

In the experience of President Edwards, as recorded by himself, we find no account of any deep and distressing convictions of sin at the commencement of his religious course; though afterwards, perhaps seven months, he remained in such a state of perplexity, that he was almost entirely insensible to the depravity of his heart. But his experience differs from that of those mentioned above in that his first views of divine things were clear and attended with unspeakable delight.
